According to Mr. Payne the new film concern really was inspired by a walk early one morning that led past a certain plot of ground owned by the Payne Estate Company. This particular plot of ground had never been very productive and Mr. Payne instantly conceived the idea that it would pay big returns on the investment if a picture theater were erected there. Not long afterward his dream became a reality and the little picture house was soon giving enjoyment to thousands of patrons weekly.

Witnessing a street accident and wishing he had a motion picture camera on the spot resulted in Mr. Payne engaging two cameramen, who began photographing scenes of interest about the streets of the city. Soon the little theater was regularly displaying scenes of local interest which made an instant hit. Mr. Payne's experimental period was now ended. He built upon the Sutter street corner a large motion picture house which he named the Sutter Street theater.

While Mr. Payne's audiences were pleased with his offerings, Mr. Payne felt that he could do better both for them and for himself. Accordingly he got in touch with Alexander E. Beyfuss, who is one of the live wires among the men of affairs in San Francisco. They determined to go into the production field upon the largest scale. They would give the people the best that could be obtained through a lavish expenditure of money, brains, artistic talent, acting ability and technical effort.

So the California Motion Picture Corporation was born. Mr. Payne became its president and Mr. Beyfuss its general-manager. Friends and business associates of the Payne family were glad to join with them in the new undertaking after it had been explained to them. Henry T. Scott, chairman of the board of directors of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company, president of the Mercantile Bank of San Francisco, and a director of the Bank of Burlingame, the Crocker National Bank, the Oakland, Antioch and Eastern Railway Company and the United Railroads of San Francisco, became vice-president and treasurer. Charles Templeton Crocker, president of the Crocker Hotel Company and director of the Crocker National Bank, was glad to become a member of the board of directors of the California Motion Picture Corporation. Arthur Payne, brother of president Payne and secretary of the Payne Estate Company; and Christian De Guigne, of the Parrott Estate Company, also became members of the board. Then the work of organizing the forces which were to portray the spirit of the golden west began. Camera men and directors were hired and a strong company at once engaged for the initial production "Salomy Jane," with Beatriz Michelena as the star. While the company was being selected, business agents of the California Motion Picture Corporation had purchased a large tract of land on the outskirts of San Rafael. Eight acres were set aside for studio and laboratory purposes. The entire tract, available for production purposes, presents an unusual variety of scenery. In the near distance is Mount Tamalpais. Muir Woods, Mill Valley, the Russian River, the famous redwood groves, are some of the scenic accessories which may be reached easily from the California studio. To go from San Francisco to San Rafael, it is only necessary to take the ferry across the bay to Sausalito and then travel by rail along the shores of the bay to San Rafael.

Mr. Payne told the story of the origin of the California Motion Picture Corporation to the reporter. Mr. Beyfuss told of the corporation's aims and its progress and its plans. It is an open secret that many of the artistic effects in "Salomy Jane" and the forthcoming release, "Mrs. Wiggs," are due to his general direction, though he will not admit as much.

"We got the effects which the public seems to admire so much in 'Salomy Jane' through the widest sort of co-operation," he said. "During the progress of 'Salomy Jane' we had many conferences which were participated in by our two head camera men, our directors, the heads of our various departments, the star, Miss Beatriz Michelena, and as the occasion demanded, laymen and other members of the company. The result was that we got the benefit of many minds all working for one purpose, to portray for the entire country the spirit of the West as we know it and love it, and as Bret Harte pictured it.

"There is one thing I wish to impress upon you; we are ambitious to make the California Motion Picture Corporation the best and most artistic producer in the country. We realized that we could only do this by attention to detail. Consequently nothing was too small for us to overlook. Some of the film critics have spoken of the crystal photography of 'Salomy Jane.' That crystal photography was obtained in this way: We never took a picture on a bad day, we waited until the conditions were perfect.

"In 'Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch' the public will see again that we have given every attention to detail. When the usual producing organization puts on a courtroom scene, the staging is usually left absolutely to the directors. When we were ready to proceed with this scene we engaged Theodore Roche, one of the leading lawyers of the Pacific Coast, to supervise the detail. Mr. Roche saw that the actor who played the judge conducted himself just as a judge should, that the lawyers, attendants, and general procedure were those of a court.

"We shall give to the public 'Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch' and 'Mignon' with Beatriz Michelena as the star, and then we shall return to Western themes. In these two productions we plan to show the public that we can compete with any Eastern producing organization. But aside from this we believe that we have a peculiar field. We are native Californians, filled with the spirit of California, and we wish to present to the world in photoplay form in such a way that it will live, the heart and essence of California and the West."

Such Scenes Please Producers

the first production of the California Motion Picture Corporation and the Alco release of November 2. The scene is typical of that which marked each day of the run. Local pride played a certain part in bringing people to see this picturization of early California as Bret Harte saw it. But the many excellencies of photography and of acting, and of the other elements of the film drama, undoubtedly contributed a big share toward the result as these qualities have been praised the country over.

Herbert Payne, president of the California Motion Picture Corporation and Alexander E. Beyfuss, general-manager, find in such scenes as this, outside the Portola, inspiration for more and better work. They believe that Beatriz Michelena in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," following so closely upon "Salomy Jane," will receive respectful attention at the hands of the moving picture public. They believe further that the remarkable qualities of the film itself will assure them another big success in "Mrs. Wiggs."

"Mrs. Black Is Back"

America's foremost comedienne, May Irwin, in the title role of the film version of the most celebrated of all her stage triumphs, "Mrs. Black Is Back," by George V. Hobart, is the next Famous Players subject to appear on the Paramount program, scheduled for release November 30. May Irwin is inimitable as the irrepressible Mrs. Black, who deceives her husband about her age, and who goes through a period of comic anguish as the result. Miss Irwin appeared in the original stage production of "Mrs. Black" for many seasons.

Strong Kinetophote Release

"The Coming Power" is a four-reel Kinetophote Corporation release from the story by Raymond C. Hill. It has to do with politics and an honest man, who is candidate for governor. After a campaign in which he makes speeches of wonderful strength and which advocate the triumph of right and justice, he is elected, but before that point of the story is reached there is much else of importance to claim and hold one's attention. There is the lame girl Ruth, (Edith Luckett) whose friendship is the inspiration of the fine speeches made by the gubernatoral candidate, Norman (Lionel Adams) and there is "the Vulture," John Carter, the role being strongly portrayed by William Crimmens. A realistic court room scene is a noteworthy feature.

"The Vulture" is a telling power throughout the story. He is unscrupulous, as is shown by his alteration of his bookkeeper's figures and his consequent accusation which causes Maylor, to be thrown into prison because "The Vulture" feared he knew too much. Carter, "The Vulture," desires the support of Norman, the candidate for governor and through Vera Mendell who is fascinated by the good looking Norman, offers him a money bribe. It is refused. Vera's jealousy, and later her pity, are aroused by Norman's attention to the crippled girl. Together, Vera and Ruth champion Norman. Carter, balked in his purpose, through his political heelers, arranges an attack on Norman. The latter is assaulted, wounds one of the men, and is jailed. Vera goes to see the wounded man in the hospital and he confesses to her that the attack was a "frame-up." With a written confession to this effect, Vera affects Norman's freedom and he is elected governor by a pleasingly big majority. This event is synonymous with the escape from prison of Maylor, who eludes his pursuers and reaches Carter's offices, where he hides. He confronts Carter and is about to claim the latter's life with his taut fingers, when the heart of "The Vulture" claims its toll in an agonizing attack and saves Maylor from being a murderer.

Another life expires at almost the same time. It is that of Ruth, the cripple. Her dying wish is for the union of Norman and Vera, and she breathes a peaceful good-bye after a vision in which prevail justice to the working man and truth and honesty in politics. M.C.

HIGHER ADMISSION PRICES.

MOTION pictures as a public entertainment had a very humble beginning. That is why they prospered and grew apace. They competed with, or rather substituted for, other forms of amusement that were no more entertaining and far more expensive. They brought the theater within the reach of people who positively could not afford it in any other form; and such people are a majority. For we must remember that we cannot judge a country by the bright lights of its big cities. In spite of the comfortable incomes that most of your friends enjoy, statistics reveal the fact that the average man earns just about enough for the necessities. Entertainment may be a necessity; but if it costs more than one can afford it ceases to be entertaining.

The motion picture business was founded and nourished on the nickel and the dime—particularly the nickel. Its strongest hold on the public is and always will be the fact that it can be offered at a lower price than any other first-class amusement.

A few years ago picture theater men had no thought of competing directly with the legitimate, of bearding the lion of entertainment in its own den. Their whole ambition was to furnish amusement at five and ten cents to those who could not or would not pay fifty cents or a dollar or two dollars. But the picture entertainment developed so rapidly and proved so excellent that it began to wean people away from higher priced forms of amusement who could well afford them. So marked was this movement among the people that the men of the legitimate, of vaudeville and burlesque became alarmed, and the aid of the newspapers was invoked in an attempt to stem the tide of popularity of the pictures. The campaign was unsuccessful and both newspapers and high priced entertainment capitulated. Today the motion picture stands as high in public esteem as any form of amusement at any price.

Picture ideals have grown as fast as picture popularity. The best picture of six years ago is the poorest of today. Some of the current multiple reel features cost as much to produce as a whole year's output of the ordinary films of early days. No single factor in the business can be either credited with or blamed for that condition. It is an inevitable development, almost a law of nature. We must go forward always. So long as picture entertainment can be improved, made bigger and better, no matter what the cost, it must and will be done. And the public must pay for it in larger admission prices; for the exhibitor must pay more to the exchange and the exchange must pay more to the manufacturer.

Several of the larger producers are publicly advocating higher admission prices. One company has gone so far as to deny bookings of its more expensive productions to theaters charging only five cents admission. The manufacturers do not have to take a hand in this matter. They are doing so simply because it is a more tactful proceeding, more friendly to the exhibitor, than to raise their own rates first and force the exhibitor to pass the charge on unwillingly.

Reels of films whose producing cost was a thousand dollars went into the construction of a nickel program. Feature productions costing a hundred thousand dollars have no broader field; they cannot bring into the business a hundred times as many nickels. So they must get a proportionately higher rate—fifteen cents, twenty-five cents, perhaps even a dollar.

They are cheap at that price, comparatively speaking. The higher admission rate is undoubtedly justified, and the manufacturers who advocate it are doing a good work. We would like to see picture theaters getting two dollars a seat, in territory that will stand that tariff.

But we must not forget the other side of the question. If all the picture theaters raised their prices we would lose the very foundation on which the business was built. And do not imagine that the beautiful superstructure that has been erected can stand by itself. It can not. Literally millions of people have been taught to expect entertainment for a nickel or a dime. They will continue to demand that entertainment, and if the present picture theaters will not continue to supply it, some one else will. Motion pictures cannot afford to abandon the low-price field when they enter the higher price field. There is a tremendous opportunity for the big, expensive production at a high admission price. As the business grows and improvements continue, the pictures will meet that opportunity and fill that field completely. But big as it is, that is not the motion picture business, but only a part of it.

Thousands, hundreds of thousands of people have gradually worked up to an expenditure for picture theater attendance as great as they could ever make for higher priced entertainment. The neighborhood theater has brought this condition about by cultivating the habit of very frequent attendance. It is not unusual to find people who go every evening, and those who go three or four times a week are common. Including the family, that means perhaps a dollar a week or more. No doubt a good many of them would be glad to concentrate that sum upon one show of superior quality. But with their appropriation spent "all in one place," what can they do with the rest of the week? They have got the picture theater habit, the habit of daily attendance. They will miss it if they cannot have it—and they cannot have it at a higher admission price. If all the picture theaters raised their prices they would have to undo the educational work of years.

So the condition is that some of the picture theaters must raise their rates, but all of them must not. It is of great strategic importance to the industry that it supply all grades of amusement. It should not "overlook any bets" for the sake of position.

The line of distinction between low-price and high-price houses should be very easily established. A great many picture theaters today are so well appointed, and of such large investment, that they automatically suggest a higher admission price and could readily get it. Others, especially in "neighborhood" districts and small towns, are so small and modest as to warrant continuing on a five and ten cent basis. Even a novice could tell almost at a glance which houses should charge high prices and which should charge low prices.

The motion picture is the only form of entertainment that is all things to all men. The very fact that it is in a position to give entertainment worth two dollars for a dollar, and entertainment worth a quarter for a nickel, is the best reason why it should serve in both capacities—or rather let us say in all capacities. It is the king of entertainers; but it can hold the throne only by serving the rich and poor alike, each at his own price. Let the higher admission price come; but let the low price remain also.

Just A Moment Please

Our old friend Jake Wilk, of the World Film Corporation, advises us that a recent applicant for a job wrote him, "I would like very much to get an engagement with your firm, either as a bookkeeper or an actor." By golly, Jake, we know several so-called actors who ought to be keeping books, but that don't apply to any of the World stars that we have seen on the screen.

PRESS AGENT'S YARNS.

We thought we had grown hardened to the most wild and weird dreams of the press agents, but we have simply got to admit that Margaret Gibson's publicity representative is too much for us. Another story like the one he submits this week and we'll be forced to admit that he has our angora. Without cracking a smile he informs us that pretty Margaret (whose photo appears herewith—as we found both it and the story irresistible) was offered an automobile for one tiny kiss. The offer came from a bewhiskered miner, just returned from the gold fields of Alaska, who had seen and admired Margaret's acting far up in the frozen north (thus proving conclusively that she has reached "farthest north" in emotional roles). Margaret, the P. A. alleges, indignantly refused his offer of an auto and bawled him out for his audacity. Later, the story runs, the miner called upon the actress, complimented her for being the kind of a girl who would bawl out "a freshie," even though it cost her a handsome auto, and then asserted that the car was to be hers anyway, as he (the miner) was her father's brother Jim, who disappeared twenty years ago. Ain't it awful?

"The Place, the Time and the Man"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

FILLED with virile action throughout its two reels, the release of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company on December 4, entitled "The Place, the Time and the Man," is one which is built upon a big theme and which depends upon its story to carry it to success. By this it is not meant that the acting, direction or photographic effects have been slighted, but rather that the plot is strong enough to make the production popular without taking any other points into consideration.

Several fine characters are introduced, all being well drawn by the author and splendidly portrayed by the actors and actresses. Richard C. Travers, Gerda Holmes, Bryant Washburn, Rapley Holmes and Lester Cuneo form the quintet upon whose shoulders the majority of the work falls, and all uphold the reputations they have earned for themselves by their previous work upon the screen.

Spear is hired by Davis' son.

Davis plans the cut.

The suspense is sustained up to the last scene of the production in which the young engineer returns to his sweetheart. While the audience knows he is alive and well, the girl has believed him dead, and the superb acting of Miss Holmes in this scene will probably make all those who follow the subject closely enjoy the sensation she experiences at again meeting him as though they, themselves, were in her position. Lester Cuneo does a hazardous climb down a cliff and later engages Mr. Travers in a fight on a moving hand car. The photography is good throughout and the lighting effect gained in the scene at the bottom of the mine shaft is rather unusual.

Group of principals in "The Place, the Time and the Man."

Burns, "the man above" in the executive department of the Pennsylvania Midland railroad, determines to secure control of the Spring Creek railroad, a rival line, and to gain this end makes a tool of President Stonefield of his own road, a well-meaning but weak-willed man. If the Spring Creek road can find a way to tunnel through a mountain range, in order to join another road it will be beyond the grasp of its rivals, but though the president of the road has put several expert engineers on the job, none have been able to solve the baffling puzzle.

Gardiner Davis is at last called in by the president and told that upon his ability to surmount the obstacle will depend the fate of the road. While searching for the president's home at night Davis accidentally gets into the home of President Stonefield and discovers that his daughter Phoebe is the girl with whom he is in love. Burns and his son, who is a worthless fellow, force Stonefield to order Davis from his home, but before he goes the young engineer tells them that he will break them, and when he has completed his task he will marry Phoebe.

Fearing Davis, Burns' son hires Jim Spear, a worthless man of the mountains, to kill the engineer when he starts work on the cut through the hills which will connect the Spring Creek with the other road. While Davis is riding alone on a hand car, Spear slides down a mountain side and drops upon him. The two struggle and the car crashes into an empty mine shaft. Davis is the first to recover consciousness and forces the other man to lead him out of the shaft by means of a secret passage, which is known to Spear alone. As they emerge from the cave at the end Davis sees before him the end of the other road and knows that the passage needed to connect his road with the other one is the one through which he has just passed.

Phoebe is told that Davis is dead, and is heartbroken. Burns and her father start to crush Spring Creek in the "pit," but the word that Davis has solved the problem of connecting the two roads that oppose Pennsylvania Midland turns the tide of buying toward Spring Creek and Burns is wiped out. Learning of their attempt to kill Davis, Stonefield turns upon Burns and his son and tells them that he is through with them. When the ex-president returns home he finds Phoebe in tears over the death of her lover, but both are happily surprised when Davis walks in and announces that he has won his fight and that he has come to claim Phoebe for his bride.

When Stonefield explains that he knew nothing of the foul tricks used by Burns, Davis grasps his hand and tell him that the Spring Creek road is in need of a man of his caliber to handle their affairs.

The cast for the production is as follows:

Gardiner Davis .....Richard C. Travers
Alton Sterns.....John Cossar
Sylvester Burns.....Rapley Holmes
George Burns, his son.....Bryant Washburn
President Stonefield.....Thos. Commerford
Phoebe, his daughter.....Gerda Holmes
Jim Spear.....Lester Cuneo

Holding 'em Out

The war pictures taken by Edwin F. Weigle, staff photographer of the Chicago Tribune, within the Belgian war zone, had an impressive opening at the Studebaker theater, Michigan avenue, Chicago, and have been playing to capacity business since that time. The accompanying photograph taken in the lobby of the theater on Sunday offers absolute evidence of the pulling power of the war films. On Saturday it is understood over 9,000 paid admissions were recorded, and on Sunday the attendance jumped to 14,000. When one considers that the prices are twenty-five and fifty cents, there seems no reason to doubt the prosperity of the box office.

Where to Book "Cabiria"

Twenty states have either been sold outright or booking granted on "Cabiria," the Itala masterwork, and active negotiations now in progress promise that two or three weeks will see the whole country contracted for. Werba & Luescher, Inc., the widely known theatrical firm who assisted Harry R. Raver in the unprecedented exploitation and routing of the eighteen "Cabiria" companies will take care of the bookings in New York and New Jersey. Their office is in the New York Theater building.

Sol Lesser, the famous film impressario of the Pacific Coast, will place the feature in that territory. W. E. Greene, the New England exchange-man, has been intrusted with the New England bookings, to be directed from Greene's office at No. 162 Tremont street, Boston. Fresh from three months of big success as field manager of the New England "Cabiria" shows, Frank Samuels has just gone to Chicago to begin operations in Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana.

Harry Bryan will take care of Eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia from offices at No. 1316 Vine street, Philadelphia. Louisiana and Mississippi rights have been sold to Herman Fichtenberg, the owner of a chain of big theaters.

Of interest to exhibitors having small houses is Harry R. Raver's announcement that, if necessary, the feature may be run as a serial over several days. This opens the way to the most obscure exhibitor to at some time be able to book the film, whose length possibly would interfere with its exhibition in one performance.

Famous Players in Los Angeles

The Famous Players Film Co. has effected plans to re-establish its studio in Los Angeles, where it operated all last winter and spring, and where were produced, among other celebrated Famous Players successes, such notable Pickford classics as "Hearts Adrift" and "Tess of the Storm Country." Albert A. Kaufman, studio manager of the Famous Players, has left for Los Angeles, where he will take command of the producing force being assembled, and manage the studio activities of the Western organization.

Marguerite Clark will be the first Famous Players star to appear in a subject produced at the western studio, plans for her presentation in "The Pretty Sister of Jose," having already been consummated. Allan Dwan, of the producing staff of the Famous Players, will accompany Mr. Kaufman to the coast studio, where he will be stationed permanently.

Tyrone Power Becomes Selig Star

The Chicago studio of the Selig Polyscope Company is to devote its attention now for some time to the production of big feature photoplays, and for that purpose closed a contract Saturday with Tyrone Power, well known on the legitimate stage, to appear in several of these productions as leading man. Mr. Power is now at the Selig studio, at Western avenue and Irving Park boulevard, where work already has begun on the first effort, "A Texas Steer." Mr. Power, it is thought, will be admirably fitted for the role of Brander, and he himself says the part appeals to him. Others to appear in the cast of the famous old Hoyt comedy will be Grace D'Armond, Frances Bayless, John Charles, Mrs. Tyrone Power, Russel Fulton, Walter Roberts, Ralph Johnson and James West.

The decision by the Selig Company to make a specialty of big features at the local studio follows the success achieved by the suffrage play, "Your Girl and Mine," which was produced there. Giles R. Warren is to continue as producing director. Following the filming of "A Texas Steer," the company will produce "The Servant in the House," in which Mr. Power will take the role of Robert Smith, the Drainman, which he played on the legitimate stage. Mr. Power entered into an agreement with W. N. Selig to appear in "The Servant in the House" some time ago, but this play, which is to be an eight-reel affair, will wait on the "Texas Steer" production.

Mr. Power said that his present opportunity with the Selig Company was the first in which he had appeared under conditions wholly satisfactory to himself.

Picture Man's War Experiences

By J. C. Bee Mason

THE old adage has it that every picture tells a story but recent experiences have have taught me that this does not necessarily mean the whole story. I have just made a tour of Holland in quest of pictures for the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial and my experiences there have convinced me that it is easier to get pictures in a country where war is being waged than in a state whose neutrality renders the surveillance of the movements of strangers infinitely more stringent than any to which I have been subjected in Belgium or France.

How British troops are fighting in Compiegne forest.

With Belgium in the hands of the Germans I turned to Holland in the hope of finding a fruitful field of operations. The kindly Dutch are showing extraordinary and practical sympathy with the poor Belgian refugees but the Dutch authorities are taking no risks of being guilty of any breach of neutrality and, in passing, I would tell you that the Dutch people, as a whole community are all on the side of the allies. More than one million Belgians, all destitute and homeless, have sought safety in Holland and it is hardly possible to tell in words the strain this has put upon the resources of this little country.

In Flushing it was impossible to get sleeping accommodation and a mattress in an attic was all I could find on my arrival there. Ordinary white bread is not to be found in the country and the supply of black bread is limited. I left Flushing the day after my arrival and traveled by train to Alkmaar, where the German prisoners are interned. Alkmaar is situated on the western coast of Holland farthest from the German frontier. There are some hundreds of Germans in the compounds here and I was greatly impressed by their general cheerfulness, even when the weather was vile enough to sadden the most cheery optimist.

Evidently being interned in a Dutch compound is not at all a disagreeable experience. Each day squads of these prisoners are taken in parties of about fifty for long walks, in charge of two Dutch guards. The men are more or less placed on parole and they make no effort to escape, for they are as far away from the German border as the Dutch authorities can put them. At this time of the year Holland is a dismal country for the "sea-fret" from the North Sea and the Zuyder Zee covers the country with a haze which casts a sort of pall of depression all over the place. And, by the way, this haze is not beloved of the photographer. No permits are given by the Dutch authorities for the taking of photographs, but the officers are sometimes subject to an attack of temporary blindness.

I left Alkmaar for Enkhuizen and crossed the Zuyder Zee in a fishing smack to Stavoren, a journey which took three hours and was made in a drenching rain. Thence I proceeded to Leeuwarden where it was with difficulty that I convinced the hotel proprietor that I was not a spy. An early start next morning brought me to Groningen, on the German border where the English prisoners are located. My entry into this town was soon noted by the authorities and a gendarme mounted on a bicycle was told off to watch my movements. I entered a cafe overlooking the barracks in which the British prisoners are housed and my sleuth-hound kept watch and ward at the door. How to get a picture was my chief thought and while the gendarme kicked his heels in the street I perched my camera on the ledge of an upper window and got the Britishers marching in the barrack square.

Leaving the cafe I went to the barracks, the gendarme following at a respectful distance. The officer refused to allow me to take pictures of the men, but they were anxious that I should not be sent away empty handed. Placing my camera on the ground and tilting it with a stone beneath the front end, I sat upon the machine and, while ostensibly chatting to some of the sailors, I was turning the handle and taking a picture of the squad of sailors running up and down the barrack yard, as they do for exercise for two hours each day. This is the only recreation which the Britishers get. They are not allowed outside the confines of the barracks for they have refused to give their word of honor not to escape if the opportunity presents itself. Indeed, several of them, aided by friends outside, have succeeded in getting free.

The fact that I was taking a picture of the men at exercises was hidden from the officer-in-charge by the fact that the men gathered round me and screened my action, but it did not escape the attention of the gendarme and his intervention resulted in a request that I should leave the barrack yard without delay. I was politely told that the use of my camera was forbidden and a not very appetizing picture of a sojourn in a Dutch jail was verbally painted for my benefit. Still being under police supervision, Groningen ceased to appeal to me and under police escort I went to the railroad depot and took train for Flushing.

New Dyreda Studios Planned

Plans have been submitted for the erection of a new studio and complete motion picture plant for the Dyreda Art Film Corporation, which has been using the old Reliance studios at Yonkers, N. Y. and has already made two features, which will be released through the World Film Corporation of New York City. This plant will cover several acres and will be equipped with all the modern devices, Cooper Hewitt lights, revolving stages, etc. The exact location of the new studio has not been given out as yet, but it is understood that it will be conveniently located to New York City. The company has decided to spend at least $75,000 on its new home and when it is finished it will be one of the best in the country. The interior stage will be 70x100 feet and will accommodate several sets at one time. It is the intention of the company to double the number of releases through the World Film Corporation, and this of course will necessitate a large force of actors, etc. at all times. The personnel of the Dyreda Company includes Frank L. Dyer, president, J. Parker Read, Jr., vice president and general manager; J. Searle Dawley, director of productions and J. H. Redfield, treasurer.

Smallwood Joins Warner's

As Motography goes to press we are informed that the Smallwood Film Corporation will release two one-reel subjects per week to Warner's program.

Pierrot Star Convalescing

Caryl Flemming, the juvenile lead of the Pierrot Film Company, who was recently injured in an automobile accident, is in one of the New York hospitals convalescing rapidly. He expects to be able to leave his place of confinement within a few days and will then join his company, which is at present working at Tappan, N. Y. Mr. Flemming's stay in the hospital was brightened by the receipt of many letters and floral offerings from his friends, and he says that his days of suffering were one surprise after another, as he heard from person after person whom he did not even know by name. Mr. Flemming spent considerable time on the stage before entering the silent drama. He started when a boy as one of the end men in the "Bush Temple Boys Minstrels" and was with them for some time. Later he joined Maude Adams and played a prominent part in "Quality Street." The following season he distinguished himself by giving an excellent portrayal of the character of "Reddy" in the well known melodrama, "The Ninety and Nine." After that came several seasons of vaudeville and stock and finally pictures via the "Powers Photoplayers." Since then he has appeared as juvenile man with Comet, Victor, Aetna, Eclair and McNabb-Ball. From the last concern named he came to his present position with the Pierrot Company.

Caryl S. Flemming.

New Lubin Series

Following the series of "The Beloved Adventurer" pictures, which has been successful beyond expectations, the Lubin Company will release a new weekly of the adventures and sad experiences of "Patsy Bolivar." Patsy's misfortunes are continuous and excruciatingly funny. The stories have been written by Clay M. Greene and the first number will be released December 28, and continue one reel every Monday for fourteen weeks. The series will, of course, be comedies and doubtless prove a worthy successor to the tales told of the good Lord Cecil.

Warning

A man using the name C. A. Allen has been representing himself as being an employee of the Gaumont Company, throughout the western states. This man has never been connected in any way with that company, but through his alleged connection with it this man recently succeeded in procuring from a party in Bellingham, Wash., three hundred feet of film.

Charles Brabin, the Edison director, promises many new and wonderful effects for his Christmas story of "The Three Wise Men."

Motography's Gallery of Picture Players

ELLA HALL, who for some six months has played ingenue leads in the Rex Company, is just sixteen years old, and can play the part of either a woman or a child to perfection. She has been upon the stage or in pictures since she was a very little girl, and a glance at her career shows that she is progressing and consistently working toward greater things. Miss Hall was chosen by David Belasco to play in "The Grand Army Man." This was her first stage experience. She understudied Mary Pickford in "The Warrens of Virginia," and following this engagement appeared with Isabel Irving in "The Girl Who Has Everything." While playing with Mabel Taliaferro that actress suggested motion pictures to her as the best field for her ability. Shortly after this she began her career in pictures, and is now playing opposite Bob Leonard in "The Master Key."

Ella Hall.

HERBERT RAWLINSON is now working under the direction of Otis Turner, and is playing leads in the Universal's Special Feature company. He has much to commend him, being popular with the public, good looking, optimistic, and young. Add to this manliness and the ability to wear his clothes as though they belonged to him and it will readily be seen that he has a brilliant future before him, for he also possesses a personality that "gets over." Mr. Rawlinson is young, but he has had the hard knocks and the heart-aches which nearly every actor worth his salt has experienced. And, moreover, he has won his way, step by step, by sheer will power and ability. He was born in Brighton, on the south coast of England, and started out on his own hook early in life. His first theatrical experience was in a repertoire company at the princely salary of six dollars a week.

Herbert Rawlinson.

WALTER MILLER, beloved by Universal fans who saw him in "Through the Eyes of the Blind" and "In Bone Gap Gulch," has been made leading man of the Victor-Universal stock company at Coytesville, N. J. Mr. Miller began his picture career with the Reliance, and was for two years leading man with the Biograph Company, where he established his reputation for versatility. Though he is a leading man, in the parlance of the theater and moving pictures, he has often taken roles which would naturally fall to other characters and made a surprising success of them. After a successful season with Bernard Daly in "Sweet Innis Fallen," he became successively leading man with the Roe stock company, the Horace Stanley stock company, and the Hall stock company. Mr. Miller is a New Yorker by residence, but a southerner by birth.

Walter Miller.

MARIE WALCAMP was born in Dennison, Ohio, July 27, 1894, and at an early age began to show her aptitude and preference for Terpsichore and Thespis. When she was five years old she entered a cake-walking contest in "The Park" at her birthplace and was the proudest kid in the Buckeye state when the judges awarded her the cake. After her father's death, the family moved to Steubenville, Ohio, where little Marie's education began—to be finished some years later at Swissvale, Pa., a suburb of Pittsburgh, which city claims Miss Walcamp as its own. Miss Walcamp entered the theatrical profession in 1912, when she joined the Kolb and Dill stock company at San Francisco. Her talent at once became apparent and it was then but a step to her engagement with the Universal players at Los Angeles. At present Miss Walcamp is playing leads in 101 Bison.

Brevities of the Business

Jesse J. Goldburg was born in Yorkville, New York City, October 21, 1881, and graduated from Public School 27 at the age of 12. Then took a course in the Dwight school, followed by four years in the New York Preparatory school.

At the age of 14 he composed a poem entitled "The Wreck of the Elbe," in fourteen stanzas, which was published in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. Upon the completion of his course in the New York Preparatory school, he entered the New York Law school, graduating at the age of 20. He was thereafter connected with various law firms and finally associated himself with Judge Warren W. Foster. Later he became secretary and executive manager of the Commercial Motion Picture Company, Inc., upon its formation, and secretary and executive manager of the Life Photo Film Corporation upon the formation of that company. Now connected with both corporations in the same capacity. Mr. Goldburg is the author of a volume entitled "Poems, Epigrams and Essays." Mr. Goldburg has been actively engaged in politics since 1902, campaigning for the Republican party throughout the entire country. He has never held office, although he has declined nominations for state assemblyman, state senator and congressman. Mr. Goldburg is married and resides at 707 St. Nicholas avenue, New York City.

F. E. Samuels is known by nearly every exhibitor in the United States and most of them know him well enough to call him "Frank." Prominent among eastern exhibitors for many years, he first became a national figure during the annual conventions and expositions of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, held in New York City, for then it was that he proved his ability as an organizer, glad-hander and general executive. He seemed to have something to do with every event or meeting that was staged during those momentous weeks, and he did them all well. More recently he toured the New England states with the Cabiria picture and was so successful that he has now tackled the middle western territory. Up in suite 809-811 of the Schiller building, on Randolph street, Chicago, you will find a concern called the Cabiria Film Renting Company, and in charge of things is no less a personage than your old friend Frank E. Samuels. He has arranged to handle not only Cabiria, but also all the other big Itala features for the territory comprised by the states of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. If you are in the market for feature films you may be sure of a warm welcome at Mr. Samuels' office, but your welcome will probably be just as sure of you look him up without the idea of booking one of his features, and the chances are a hundred to one that before you leave he will have your name on the dotted line to one of his contracts.

William A. Williams and Harry Handworth, scenario in hand, were exploring the Saranac Lake part of the country looking for locations. They came to a water-fall that boomed and gushed and did all the other things that waterfalls are accredited with doing—and right then Mr. Williams had a brilliant thought. He imparted it. Mr. Handworth gave careful attention while Mr. Williams suggested with enthusiasm—"and after that he can fall into the river up there and be dashed down over the falls and about half a mile further on, somebody can rescue him, see?" Mr. Handworth saw. "Fine," he commented, "and d'you know, Williams, I think I'll write that into your part!" And he did. "The Shadow," the December release of the Excelsior Film Company will prove it to you.

Ira M. Lowry, general manager of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, left last week for a trip to the Pacific Coast. Mr. Lowry will combine business with pleasure, devoting considerable attention to the large Lubin plant at Los Angeles.

Otto Raths of St. Paul, Minnesota, was a Chicago visitor one day this week. He reports that on Thanksgiving Day he will open his new Ideal theater in South St. Paul, which is a $35,000 fireproof house with an enormous seating capacity. Ten cents will be the fixed admission price and a host of Mr. Raths' friends unite in wishing him success in his new palace of entertainment.

H. O. Bodine journeyed into New York from Rochester, New York, recently in the interests of the Fireproof Film Company.

Alex Beyfuss of the California Motion Picture Corporation was a Chicago visitor last week.

George Wiley, formerly of Kansas City, is now a special representative of the General Film Company, with headquarters in New York City.

F. J. Skerrett is reported confined to his home for a few days with broken arches. His innumerable friends trust he will soon be about again.

While motion picture stocks, as a rule, follow their own bent, irrespective of the trend of the general market, during this last week several of the stocks reflected the general "bullish" sentiment which seems to have affected all classes of securities throughout the country, and, while some investors still believe the biggest jumps that were shown in any class of stock from Monday, November 9, to Saturday, November 14, were in the various Standard Oil securities, in recording advances of from 20 to 30 points, the motion picture held its own. Syndicate Film bounded from 140 to 165. This, however, was based on its declaration of an extra dividend of 25 points, payable November 23 to stockholders of record November 17. We quote the remark of one investor who had never before experienced the activities of a motion picture stock: "These stocks don't advance, they bounce."

Mutual Film Corp.—Both preferred and common have also reflected a better demand and the earnings of this company have been materially helped by the receipts from both the "Million Dollar Mystery" and from their potential percentage of the bookings on the "Zudora" series.

General Film, Preferred—The stockholders of this company do not seem to support the reported earnings of the company with any buying orders. This stock is worth from 10 to 15 points more than it is selling for, when compared with other securities on an earning basis.

Thanhouser Syndicate Corp.—The bookings on Saturday, November 14, were reported in excess of $450,000. The number of theaters featuring this series will be in excess of 5,000 and there are close to 500 newspapers that will give the novelized presentation to their readers.

Ruth Stonehouse, the pretty Essanay actress, has adopted a family of four children and their mother. While she has not taken out legal papers of adoption. she is looking after them and seeing that they have enough to eat, that their rent is paid and that they have coal to keep them warm.

Frank Borzage and Leona Hutton, Domino-Mutual stars, went through an ardent lovemaking scene recently in full view of several hundred persons at the Santa Fe railroad station in Los Angeles merely because Scott Sidney, who was directing the production, would take no chance on the sun going down.

Charles Lewis, who has virtually grown up in the film business, has been engaged to manage the New York exchange for the K. C. Booking company, Incorporated. Mr. Lewis is well known in the trade through his association with the Universal and with the Jungle Film Company, which exploited the Rainey Hunt pictures.

E. Oddy Freeman, general manager of the Freeman Amusement Company of Minneapolis, Minn., was a caller at Motography's office during the week.

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard with their Universal company have been making pictures at the seaport of San Pedro, Cal., the last week. They have been working on three big photoplays while there and the trucks have been busy rushing from the port to the studio in Hollywood for added costumes and props.

Florence La Badie, the much beloved heroine of the "The Million Dollar Mystery," will soon be seen in feature two reel releases of unusual strength. Arthur Ashley, former Vitagraph leading man and a recent convert to the Thanhouser forces, will play opposite her.

The K. C. Booking Company, Incorporated, has taken over the bookings of "Born Again," in which Beulah Poynter has been featured. This picture will take the place of "The Little Jewess," a Kinetophote production, in the November releases through the K. C. Company. "The Little Jewess" will be set forward to the list of December releases of the Kinetophote. The theaters which have booked "The Little Jewess" for November will have it for dates in December.

Having a heavily laden auto truck run over his foot proved to be of small consequence to Ralph Lewis, while playing the lead in the Reliance thriller "His Responsibility." In this picture Lewis alights from an auto truck. In swinging off the truck steps, Lewis missed his grasp on the hand rail and was thrown under the truck. The front wheels of the truck passed entirely over Lewis' right foot, not injuring him seriously however.

Herbert Rawlinson, will play the part of Pythias in "Damon and Pythias," the new masterpiece produced by Otis Turner for the Universal Film Manufacturing company.

The World Film Corporation has opened its twenty seventh branch office, at Omaha, Nebraska and D. R. Pearsons has been placed in charge. Mr. Pearsons formerly was the Omaha manager of the Eclectic Film Company, and the General Film Company.

Jack Richardson of the "Flying A" in trying to quit cigarettes had his throat painted with nitrate of silver. One half hour later found him standing in at a soda fountain drinking lemon juice to counteract the "three day cure."

Dorothy Phillips of the eastern Universal went to her home in Baltimore a few days ago, and her old school chums arranged a little surprise for her in the form of a good old-fashioned party. There was a game of postoffice and all, just as Miss Phillips used to play them before she became a popular screen artist.

William E. Wing now is engaged in writing some specials for Tom Mix, as well as a series of single-reel animal pictures for the Selig Polyscope Company.

The Ben Wilson Club of New Rochelle, have announced to Ben Wilson, the well-known Victor actor, that such a club has been formed by his admirers.

The title of the initial Eaco Films Inc., release "The Millionaire Detective" has been changed to "A Double Haul" due to the fact that a prominent play broker has the rights to a play bearing the same title, which is about to be picturized. "A Double Haul" is being released through the Strand Film Company channels.

Harry Pollard is to put on four reel features for the American Company, starting very shortly. He is to produce special photoplays, both from well known novels, plays and stories and strong original scenarios by well known writers. Margarita Fischer is to be starred in these plays which will be written around her wonderful personality.

Mr. Goldburg, secretary of the Life Photo Film Corporation, together with Leonard Abrahams, the vice president of that concern, will shortly make a visit to San Diego, Calif., for the purpose of locating a site to build a western studio.

Robert H. Cochrane, secretary and treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing company, has enjoyed for some time sole possession of the name "Robert H.," but the latest authorized report it that he has a rival for that distinction. Robert H. Cochrane, Jr. is the name of the second party of the second part and it is said that he is round-faced and handsome. Robert H. jr. came to life October 10, bringing with him a world of happiness for the parents and hearty congratulations from a host of friends.

Edith Luckett, leading woman with Chauncey Olcott, who has appeared in three Kinetophote features this year, has never seen herself in any of them until this wek when she visited the Kinetophote offices at 126 West 46th street and saw herself in "The Spirit of the Poppy," "The Coming Power," and "The Little Jewess."

The "Hazards of Helen," as exploited by Director J. P. Mc Gowan for the Kalem Company, continue to get more hazardous, and Helen Holmes in number seven of the series thoroughly enjoyed her work with Walter Brookins in his aeroplane. In "A Daring Deed" now being produced, Helen Holmes seizes a child on a railroad bridge and jumps off into the water as the train thunders by. The Kalem company has chartered a special train and crew for the series of fifteen photoplays.

Sidney Smith, juvenile lead of the Selig Comedy Company, has been drafted by Director Colin Campbell for appearance in "The Rosary."

Frederick Sullivan, Thanhouser director who is staging "Zudora." established a studio record last week when he took thirty long scenes in one working day.

Because of the excellent showing he made while directing the Turner special feature company during Mr. Turner's trip east, Frank Lioyd is soon to be given a post as director of a new Universal company to be organized especially for him. Not until the completion of the fifteenth installment of the "Trey o' Hearts" series, however, will the company start its productions, for George Larkin, hero of the series, is to be made Mr. Lloyd's lead. Playing opposite him will appear Helen Leslie, and Mr. Lloyd himself will play the heavy character leads. The films are to be released under the Rex brand.

Director F. J. Grandon again is at work at the Selig studio, Los Angeles, after fighting off an ailment of the throat. He is putting on a multiple-reel story of the Canadian woods.

Nicholas Power, president of the Nicholas Power Company, celebrated his sixtieth birthday the last week of October. He is the grand "young-old man" of the film industry.

Southard Brown, formerly located in Mr. Kirk's office at Warners, is now to be found in the Alliance Films Corporation suite, where he is assistant publicity advertising manager.

The Colonial Motion Picture Corporation has entered the topical field by securing the exclusive rights for photographing in motion pictures the annual Yale-Harvard football game on November 21 at New Haven.

Little Maury, Loel and Baby Eldean Steuart of the Five Steuarts, formerly of the Biograph, will be seen in a special Edison Christmas feature.

The majority of Paul Panzer's extra time is spent in making personal appearances at the theaters in and about New York that are showing "The Perils of Pauline," in which he plays the villainous and difficult role of Owen. Some time ago Mr. Panzer spent two months touring the theaters in and about New York and as far west as Ohio, but his busiest night was when he recently appeared at the Springfield, Westfield, and North Hampton, Mass., houses of Goldstein Brothers' Amusement Company, leaving New York at five o'clock in the afternoon and returning at midnight. Disliked as is his role as Owen, Mr. Panzer's personal tour is proving a strong drawing card at the large picture houses.

Victor Johnson, who has been favorably known as a member of the Telegraph's advertising staff, has resigned from that position to handle the publicity matter on Raymond L. Ditmar's zoological film, which has just completed a return engagement at the Academy, in Brooklyn.

Harold Rendall, formerly of the News advertising management, is successfully filling the Johnson vacancy on the Telegraph.

William Russell, while going down-town on a Riverside bus, one morning last week, saw a runaway horse approaching. He hurriedly descended from the 'bus, caught the horse and received the thanks of its rider, a young woman from Philadelphia, who is visiting friends on Riverside Drive. Mr. Russell's screen popularity caused him to be recognized and the New York evening papers all carried an account of his act of heroism.

Pearl White and Paul Panzer have called a truce for the night of November 18, when they are to lead the march at the Boston exhibitors' ball. It is understood between them, though, that after the ball Pauline will still have to peril through Owen's machinations.

Marguerite Snow, who takes the title role of "Zudora," Thanhouser's big serial, will further endear herself to feminine hearts by her patriotic garmentry, for Miss Snow has declared she is for "Made in America" clothes.

Riding in an aeroplane with Walter Brookins in her last "Hazards of Helen" installment, Helen Holmes of Kalem recalled vividly her first ascent into the air. Some years ago in Chicago while but a child of fifteen she won the prize for the most famous artist's model. For advertising purposes the paper which ran the enterprise persuaded her to go up in an aeroplane, and an ascent of 1,500 feet was made while Helen threw circulars down upon the city.

Al E. Christie, the popular director of the Nestor Company, is back in Hollywood, Calif., from his jaunt in the East and his company are now happy. Eddie Lyons, who directed during his absence, swears he never slept a wink while Christie was gone, and Lee Moran blew himself and company to ten cent cigars. Producer Christie will put on two comedies a week, with Eddie Lyons directing the second company under his supervision.

Margaret Joslin, of the western Essanay comedy company, is an ardent believer in women's rights. She argued the matter with Harry Todd and Victor Potel one evening recently and they disagreed with her flatly. She was piqued, but let it go at that. She got even next day, however, when she took the part of a suffragist leader in the Essanay comedy, "Snakeville's Reform Wave." The two other actors were the recalcitrant husbands who were beaten into submission and voted for reform against their will.

Edgar Jones of the Lubin Company claims credit for having antedated all productions in which night photography is a feature. The night battle scenes were photographed at 3 a. m. one morning last February, after weeks of experimentation. A heavy snowfall added to the difficulties but the historical accuracy of the battle in "Stonewall Jackson's Way" demanded it and the effect of the exploding flashlight bombs is evidence of the producer's fine eye for artistic effects.

Bert Angeles is directing pictures at David Horsley's Centaur plant in Bayonne, N. J.

All Westchester county, N. Y., contributed in the way of dogs, stray, loose and otherwise; big, thin and small, and of high and low degree, to the making of the forthcoming Thanhouser release, "A Dog Catcher's Bride."

Otis Turner of Universal's west coast studios, affectionately termed the "Guvnor," is quite a character in his way. Every day he can be seen with some young director hobnobbing with him and asking for advice which is freely and cheerfully given, and the advice is mixed with much dry humor.

From the position of silent comique, appearing in person before circus audiences the world over, to that of silent comique appearing in shadow on the screen between is not a long step, in fact it has been taken very successfully by Harry LaPearl, for many years producing clown with the Barnum & Bailey and Ringling Brothers circuses and the New York Hippodrome, who is now appearing in the one-reel comedies which David Horsley is producing at his Centaur plant in Bayonne, N. J.

Contrary to a statement recently published, F. H. Vine, manager of the Eclectic feature film exchange at Boston, has not resigned.

Residents in almost any part of Santa Barbara, Cal., can witness to the fact that the good old-fashioned charivari has not utterly passed away, and the "Flying A" boys proved it when they gathered twenty-four strong Tuesday evening and "shot up" (with studio guns) the new Heimerl home on State street. Mr. Heimerl and his bride surrendered and came out to greet their uninvited guests, who had meanwhile made themselves quite at home.

Louise Huff, the littlest leading woman at Lubinville, has started the knitters going in the big Lubin courtyard, and now while the actresses, from leading woman to newest beginner, await their call it is not with idle hands, but with clicking needles and anxious questions about the sailing of the relief ship, and when do you drop a stitch.

Jack (Francis) Dillon and Billy Rhodes have been added to Al E. Christie's Nestor company.

Bessie Barriscale is being featured in a big feature at the New York Motion Picture Corporation studios at Santa Monica, Cal., under the direction of Thomas Ince and Raymond B. West and with Charles Ray as an opposite lead.

Edwin August, managing producer of the Eaco Films, Inc., to secure an effect for a melodramatic photoplay, purchased a house in Coytesville and ordered same to be blown to smithereens with some dynamite. The title has not been selected of the picture in which this will be used.

Dr. Perkins, mayor of Denver, will be seen in a forthcoming Thanhouser release called "A Denver Romance." When the "Yellowstone" company from the Thanhouser New Rochelle studio was in Denver an entire picture was taken in that city.

Crowd gathered in front of Mozart Theater, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, at 10.30 P. M. still waiting to see "After the Ball" the Photo Drama Company's multiple reel feature.

Mr. Francis X. Bushman, leading man with the Essanay eastern company, has been picked by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of New York to lead the grand march at the association's annual ball on December 7. The ball will be held in the Grand Central Palace and preparations to make it the biggest event of its kind are now under way. More than 30,000 persons are expected to attend.

Harry Palmer, the famous war correspondent and newspaper cartoonist, who was sent over to take in the European war in general and the siege of Liege in particular in the interest of David Horsley and the Centaur Film Company of Bayonne, N. J., is back in New York, having returned early in the week on the Epsilon from Rotterdam.

Charles Waldron, who is at present filling an important part in the current dramatic success, "Daddy Long-Legs," has been engaged by the Famous Players Film Co. to support Mary Pickford in the forthcoming production of "Esmeralda," by Frances Hodgson Burnett.

In denial of the reports that he had arranged to direct for another company, Lionel Belmore, states most emphatically that he will resume his directorship with the Vitagraph Company, as soon as his present theatrical contract expires.

Robert Z. Leonard and his company of Rex players are still in San Francisco where they have gone to produce certain scenes in the fifth installment of the Universal great serial, "The Master Key," written by John Fleming Wilson.

With them has gone Calder Johnstone, of the scenario desk at the Universal west coast studios, who together with Mr. Leonard has been putting into scenario form the stories as they emanated from Mr. Wilson's pen.

Antonio Moreno, one of the popular juvenile leads of the Vitagraph stock company, enjoys the unique distinction of having one of the Argentine Republic's latest battleship named for him. When it became time for the heads of the Navy Department of Argentine to select a name for one of the republic's latest battleships, then on the ways, an influential member of the navy board recalled that he owed Tony a debt of gratitude, and in a letter addressed to the Vitagraph player asked permission to use the name Moreno without signifying for what purpose and his request was granted.

General Baumganen, commander of the French troops in Morocco, in a letter to Pathe Freres has highly praised the conduct of their cameraman, who was present during the attack on Taza. With remarkable coolness the cameraman, M. Pierre Chavarous, while directly in the line of fire, continued to take his pictures with apparently no thought as to his own safety.

Constance Brinsley, who is a member of the eastern scenario department of the Universal, has been an actress since childhood. Before coming to this country, she toured England with her own company, starring in strong emotional roles. She has written for many foreign publications and supplied scenarios to many firms, among them being the Aquilla, Turino, Powers and Vitagraph.

Charles Simone, who is rounding out an impressive career by directing pictures at David Horsley's big Centaur plant in Bayonne, N. J., has recently finished a five-part, spectacular production of the famous Verdi opera "Il Trovatore," and is now going ahead putting on other pictures.

Robert T. Kane, supervisor of exchanges for the Alco Film Corporation has just returned to New York after a trip in the interests of his corporation through Pennsylvania, Michigan, Chicago and Minnesota. He will leave again within a few days to visit the Alco exchanges in other parts of the country. Mr. Kane's mission is to carry the Alco gospel to exhibitors and exchange men. He keeps the various exchanges in constant co-operation with one another and with the parent company in New York.

Edith Storey, one of the mermaids of the Vitagraph Company, was forced to take a cold plunge in the water of the studio yard tank as heroine of Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady's picturized novel, "The Island of Regeneration," one of the coming feature pictures the Vitagraph Company have in active preparation for the Vitagraph Theater.

After a week's vacation, following the completion of the fifteenth and last installment of the "Trey o' Hearts" series, Wilfred Lucas and his Gold Seal company are again busy at work at the west coast studios of Universal on a three-reel society drama entitled "Madonna of the Moon," featuring Cleo Madison.

The powerful impression acting in front of the camera makes on a childish mind and the way moving picture terms and expressions pervade even the home life of the young artists, is exemplified in a remark of little Helen Connelly, one of the popular "kiddies" of the Vitagraph company. Helen is Bobby's sister and it is customary for the children to discuss the work of the day after their supper. "Don't you think of the pictures all the time?" asked Helen. "Gee! no," said Bobby. "I am so used to them, when I get through with one I forget all about it most of the time." "I wish I could," remarked Helen, "I think of them all the time and even when I go to bed, I just lie awake and dream and dream until I dissolve into sleep."

Vivian Rich and her mother had a splendid outing recently when they went from the Santa Barbara American studios to Los Angeles by train and then motored sixty miles to Camp Baldy, where they joined a jolly party of college undergraduates.

The Famous Players Film Co. has engaged a distinguished cast of noted Broadway performers to support Marie Doro in the film version of her greatest success, "The Morals of Marcus," by William J. Locke, which includes Eugene Ormond and Julian L'Estrange.

William D. Taylor has been engaged to direct Carlyle Blackwell of the Favorite Players company.

On Friday evening, November 13, sixty Vitagraph players and members of the executive staff of the company attended a performance of "The High Cost of Loving," Lew Field's presentation, at the Republic theater, New York City. Their attendance was complimentary to James Lackaye, their friend and former associate, who was well known in Vitagraph pictures.

Holy Redeemer Church in Detroit is booking the World Film Corporation releases every Sunday. The church seats one thousand people and does a tremendous business, the net proceeds of which are contributed to charity. R. H. Reynolds, the manager, gives his services gratis.

True Boardman of the western Essanay company has been presented with a brand new revolver by one of his admirers. The sender declared the one he used in his acting looked too small for his hand, although it is a regulation Colt. The new one is 13 inches long.

"Called Back," the famous old English sporting novel by Hugh Conway, has been produced by the Universal at its Pacific coast studios and will be released on the company's regular program on December 1, as a four-reel Gold Seal special. "The Ghost of Smiling Jim," a two-reel drama, was originally scheduled for release on this date; the Nestor brand release of this date will also be displaced on account of the release of the four-reeler.

"The Spoilers" was selected to re-open the Broadway Rose Gardens in New York City for an indefinite run.

As the result of sending a young chap who was working in his company as extra player to San Francisco to be at the bedside of his dying father Donald Crisp, director for the Majestic-Mutual combination, is $25 shy on his bank account.

Fred C. Amer of the Royal Feature Film Company, Columbus, Ohio, volunteers this information and these are his exact words in a letter written to the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation: "Beulah Poynter in 'Lena Rivers' is great and the film is meeting with general approval."

Edward Earle recently came in close contact with the water in one of the small resort lakes just north of New York, and was deeply impressed with its frigid sincerity. The impression was so deep, in fact, that it took three or four blankets and a series of piping hot cold-preventatives to coax it out of his system. Mr. Earle's out-of-season dip took place during the making of the picture, "The Girl of the Open Road," one of the "Olive's Opportunities" series in which he does the heroic for Mabel Trunnelle, weather, discomfiture and inclination notwithstanding.

Sam Ryan, the well known comedian and character man formerly with Pathe-Freres, is now appearing in pictures directed by T. Hayes Hunter, who produced the gigantic Colonial feature, "The Seats of the Mighty."

Earle Williams was presented with an aluminum tablet, beautifully framed in the same metal, from the Motion Picture Magazine in commemoration of his triumph in the popularity contest which was running in that publication for ten months.

Lester Cuneo, Essanay actor who is tumbled off a cliff and killed by Francis X. Bushman in "The Prince Party," declares that Mr. Bushman makes his scenes entirely too realistic to suit the mortal body. He says he was shoved over the embankment with a jolt that he can still feel in his spine and he has been using witch hazel for bruises for a week.

James Cooley, who is playing in the Imp company directed by Lucius Henderson, was born in Columbus, Ohio. He attended schools in Columbus and went later to the Ohio State University. Joining the Reliance three years ago, he severed his connections with the legitimate, where he had been for ten years. From the Reliance he went with the Biograph and took leading parts in several of its productions.

The Peerless Film Company is a new factor in the film rental field. Its purpose is to buy, sell and export films to the South American countries. H. B. Muller, Bertram Wolff and M. H. Whitelaw are behind the company, which has a suite of offices at 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York City.

Thomas H. Ince, to guard himself against possible losses through injury to George Beban, now appearing in a new Mutual feature production, he has taken out a life and accident insurance policy in the sum of $25,000. This step was taken following an accident last week in which Mr. Beban had a miraculous escape from death under the wheels of a street car.

To say that Lillian Drew was astonished when a friend told her she had heard that she had been married four times, is putting it mildly. She traced the report and discovered that it came from a person who had been listening to her discussing the Essanay photo comedy, "The Fable of the Club Girls and the Four Times Veteran," by George Ade, in which Miss Drew takes the part of the widow.

Another of the popular "Blue Flame" series of detective dramas is being produced in the Selig studio at Los Angeles, Cal., under the direction of Edw. J. Le Saint. It is called "The Black Diamond." During the course of the photoplay Guy Oliver appears in three different roles—an elderly man, his son, a middle aged man, and the grandson. Stella Razeto takes the part of a clever woman counterfeiter.

Jack Cohn, editor of the Universal Animated Weekly, sent recently a camera-man to Philadelphia, where pictures were obtained of the S. S. Thelma, chartered by John Wanamaker, leaving that port with food supplies for the war stricken countries.

James Durkin is leading his own Thanhouser-Mutual Company and producing at the same time and is playing opposite Margaret Marsh, who "broke" into the picture game under the name of Marguerite Loveridge, playing comedy leads to Fred Mace. She has a big following and will henceforth appear under her real name.

Charles Gaskill and Helen Gardner with their company of Vitagraph players, have returned from Sparkhill, N. Y., where they have been engaged in taking out-door scenes for their forthcoming Vitagraph features in which Helen Gardner plays the lead. Among those who are cast in these pictures are Nicholas Dunaew and Rex Hitchcock.

Aaron M. Gollos left Chicago for New York the early part of the week to secure several feature films.

The Illinois Naval reserves play an important role in the Essanay drama "Every Inch a King." Several of the scenes in this play, which is released December 11, are taken aboard the cutter Dubuque. Francis X. Bushman is the leading character in the play but the reservists play an important part in forming the lesser characters.

At the third annual reception of the Mosholu Club of Bedford Park, recently held in McKinley Square Casino, in the Bronx, Augustus Phillips, the leading man of the Edison Company was a guest of honor with Governor Glynn, Park Commissioner Whittle and Congressman Goulden.

Lyster Chambers, a well known English actor who is appearing in the Kinetophoto's screen version of the late Sutton Vane's melodrama, "The Span of Life" narrowly escaped being thrown from the back of his horse into a ravine 200 feet deep while the Company was taking some scenes along the cliffs over which hang the Passaic Falls near Paterson, N. J. last Thursday.

Romaine Fielding, prominent in the Lubin Company and referred to as the "4 in 1" (manager, director, author and leading man) will be a conspicuous figure at the annual Screen Club Ball to be held at the Astor Hotel, New York, Thanksgiving Eve, November 25. With several of his own guests, he will occupy Box 27, which he has purchased for himself. Mr. Fielding will lead the grand march at the Philadelphia Exhibitors' Ball to be held in that city December 8.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Pathe Daily News No. 75—Pathe—November 9.—This weekly contains views of the chrysanthemum show in Washington, D. C. Ralph De Palma winning the forty mile auto race at Brighton Beach. The cross country run between Harvard and Cornell. A fashion section showing latest gowns from Paris and numerous scenes from the European war zone.

Pathe Daily News No. 76—Pathe—November 11.—The launching of the giant oil tank ship Lyman Stewart at San Francisco, and view of the Chicago stock yards during their recent quarantine are shown in this issue of the Pathe Weekly. In the war section are views of the English trops near Brias, France, some of the Indian troops leaving Marseilles for the fight, and scenes in the home of Empress Eugenie, widow of Napoleon III, at Farnsborough, England, which has been turned into a hospital for the English, French and Belgian officers wounded in the war.

Pathe Daily News No. 77—Pathe—November 16.—Pictures showing the removal of a span of the Philadelphia and Reading bridge weighing 200,000 pounds and the substituting of another, all accomplished in one minute and thirty seconds; interesting views of the Mexican military convention at Aguascalientes, Mexico, where Eulalio Gutierrez was elected president; also scenes of the oil tank fire at Pasadena, Calif.; the launching of several military transports in Genoa, Italy; the burning of the village of Poperinghe, Belgium, by the Germans and, the exhibition of the captured war trophies at Lyons, France, make this number of the Pathe topical unusually interesting.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 75—Selig—November 16.—In this issue the Kronprincezzin Cecelie, which escaped from European cruisers and put into Bar Harbor, is shown anchored in the harbor of Boston. Views are given of the Jersey City stock yards, where the cattle are being treated for the foot and mouth disease, also views of the Chicago stock yards, and the slaying of pigeons that were spreading the disease. At the State Federation of Women's Clubs at Atlanta, Ga., Mrs. Gibson displays the spinning wheel, which was used in war times, showing how the women of the south were helping with its cotton crop. Bundles of toys and warm clothing are shown being packed in boxes for the Christmas ship Jason, which is soon to sail from New York to Europe. Numerous interesting scenes from the European conflict are shown, among them being pictures of Antwerp and northern Belgium. The reel closes with a view of a large conflagration near Atlantic City.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 76—Selig—November 19.—U. S. troops are shown arriving in the Arkansas mining district to quell a recent disturbance there; views are given of the Salvation Army in Boston, rolling linen bandages to be used by the Red Cross corps in Europe. From New York comes a scene showing a 160-ton statue being moved in order that the subway may be constructed across the site where it once stood. In the war section British troops are being shown reviewed in London, the Belgians marching to the Yser and the French marines in several of the coast cities.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

Scars of Possession—Essanay (Two Reels) November 22.—Payne Forsythe, once a millionaire now a pauper, sees an ad in the paper calling for a young man to give his blood for a sick woman in a hospital. He answers the ad, but is not permitted to see the woman whose life he is saving. Years later, again a millionaire, and in love with Louise Courtwright, an heiress, he learns with surprise that she was the girl whose life he saved. Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne featured. See review on page 701 issue of November 21.

N. G. C.

Thrown Off the Throne—Biograph—November 23.—The queen tires of the king's delicatessen feasts and plots to put Duke Gookus, the rightful heir on the throne. The king's spies interrupt Duke Gookus and the queen at a secret meeting and the king orders Gookus to be placed in the torture chair with the terrible teeth. The queen, shut up in the tower, sends up a rocket which carries word to the duke's men and they storm the castle. They rescue the duke and the queen and the king is thrown of the throne and placed in the chair of the terrible teeth, while Gookus is crowned king.

All On Account of the Cheese—Biograph—November 23.—Afraid of burglars, when alone in the house, Susie leaves a half-eaten cheese sandwich on the table. Hearing a noise, she telephones her father that there are burglars in the next room and climbs into a trunk, pulling the lid down over her. The father summons the police, who arrive after many funny happenings and break down the door. Susie, in the trunk, is mistaken for the burglar at first, but presently the police break into the next room and discover the cause of the alarm—a number of mice gnawing at the cheese.

His Chorus Girl Wife—Edison—November 23.—Gladys Hulette's work is always sincere and pleasing, and the role of Gladys Warwick in this picture seems to have been created especially for her, so well does she appear in it. The plot is a strong one, and its end, though a little improbable, is thoroughly satisfying and not conventional. Reggie marries a chorus girl, and, in fear, conceals it from his father. Gladys thinks that he is ashamed of her, and returns to her home in the country. When she tells of her marriage her father doubts her word, and denounces her for bringing disgrace upon their name. The next day, Thanksgiving, Gladys packs up her things and leaves home. It happens that Reggie and his father are at the station, where they got off to change trains. The young married couple embrace in spite of the presence of Reggie's father. Gladys' parents enter in search of their daughter, and the two men turn out to be old schoolmates. The whole party returns to the Warwick home for a Thanksgiving dinner. C.R.C.

Sweedie at the Fair—Essanay—November 23.—This time, Sweedie becomes the owner of a donkey and when "fired" from her position as cook at the Rich household, Sweedie journeys to the county fair, and endeavors to win a few prizes with the help of the donkey. The picture ends with an exciting chase of Sweedie and the donkey in an automobile, by the famous Pickle Police. Wallace Beery featured. N. G. C.

The Theft of the Crown Jewels—Kalem (Two Reels) November 23.—The impoverished King of Eltwich-Haldmandt plans an alliance between his daughter, Princess Zavia, and Prince Sacholdt of Murtavia. When the prince leaves his country, declaring that he must marry as his heart dictates, Zavia offers to sell the royal jewels in a foreign country. By chance Prince Sacholdt is a passenger on the same steamer and meets her. Von Block, a jewel thief, follows Zavia and one day arranges an accident in order that he may obtain her jewels. Sacholdt captures Von Block and returns the jewels to Zavia, whose whose identity he now suspects. He wires his country authorizing a loan to Zavia's kingdom and she is ordered home, where she learns that the alliance has been renewed and that she is to marry Prince Sacholdt, whom she loves. Alice Joyce featured.

"The Beloved Adventurer"—The Serpent Comes to Eden—No. 11—Lubin, November 23.—Lord Cecil and Lady the situation and with the assistance of the Countess Lurovich sow the seeds of genius Carson is still resolved to fight Betty are supremely happy but their evil doubt in the mind of the young bride and peruade her that Cecil is unfaithful and ashamed of her, thereby inducing her to give him freedom. Before doing so, however, she deeds the Golden Hope Mine over to Cecil and though giving herself over to the conspirators she is empty handed. Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe are excellent and at their best in this number and many of the admirers of the "Beloved Adventurer" will regret that any circumstance can mar the happiness of the excellent couple.

Out of Petticoat Lane—Selig (Two Reels) November 23.—Jessie becomes jealous of Meg and knocks her unconscious during a quarrel over Biff, a worthless fellow. Two sweethearts befriend the girls and they are reconciled when they meet at a cottage in the country. Later they meet two farmer boys and fall in love with them and happiness comes to all. Complete review will be found on page 708 of the November 21 issue of Motography.

The Level—Vitagraph—November 23.—Accustomed only to the manners of rough men, Carolyn Johnson becomes as wild and fierce-tempered as a tigress. Bob Arnold, a settler, meets her and believing a change of environment will make her a very loveable girl, he proposes. Carolyn's father forces her to marry Bob and she assents on condition that her dog, Wolf, may accompany her. All Bob's kindneses are repulsed and when one day he overhears her telling Wolf "he ain't like a man at all, he's too soft" his whole manner changes. He becomes harsh and brutal and she grows half afraid of him, but loves and adores him. Eventually she learns that his brutality is all assumed and is then only too glad to receive his love. Myrtle Gonzalez featured.

The Romance of a Poor Young Man—Biograph (Two Reels) November 24.—The Marquis De Champecy sells his estate in the West Indies and prepares to return to Paris. Ere he departs he is attacked, robbed and killed by Laroque, a sea rover. Laroque goes to Paris and buys a handsome home. Ten years later Maxime De Champecy, th dead man's heir, sells the remainder of his property to pay his debts and places his sister in a convent. Penniless, he becomes general manager of Laroque's estate under an assumed name. He meets and falls in love with Marguerite, Laroque's granddaughter. Monsieur Bevallan also loves Marguerite and plots with Helouin, her governess, to secure her hand and eventually succeeds in exposing Maxime's real name and relationship to Marquis De Champecy, when Marguerite dismisses him as a lover. Later, to avoid compromising the girl, Maxime climbs down the side of a tower in which they have both been confined by Bevallan. Loroque's conscience troubles him so much that he eventually makes known his crime and restores the fortune to Maxime, its rightful owner, who then marries Marguerite.

A Gypsy Madcap—Edison—November 24.—This is the first release of the "Olive's Opportunities" series, directed by Richard Ridgely, and featuring Mabel Trunnelle supported by Edward Earle and Herbert Prior. The first chapter leads one to believe that the series will have a well-defined continuity between releases, though at times they will undoubtedly be enlivened by thrills. The scenes are mostly beautiful woodland exteriors, and they receive full justice in the soft but distinct photography that marks the picture. Vance Coleman falls in love with a pretty gypsy girl, Olive. His father threatens to cut him off in his will unless he gives her up, and, on the boy's refusal to comply with his request, he changes his will in favor of Drew Martin. Returning home, Vance finds his father deathly sick, for Martin has given him an overdose of medicine to hasten his end. The young fellow hurries to the gypsy camp and notifies Olive of his father's condition. She returns with him, taking with her a bottle of herb tonic which revives the aged man. C. R. C.

Beyond Youth's Paradise—Essanay—November 24.—Captain Fane, an English army officer stationed in Cairo, is in love with Lady Fiennis, who is treated most cruelly by her brutal husband. Fane returns to England and five years later is told by his sister that her son, Frankie, twenty-two years old, has decided to marry a widow many years his senior. She begs him to go to Cairo and save the boy from this woman. Fane makes the journey, and finds that Frankie is in love with Lady Fiennis, now known as Mrs. Fenton. He learns that Lord Fiennis had discovered his wife to be infatuated with an army officer and, out of jealousy, cut her off without a cent when he died. When Captain Fane meets Frankie's inamorata, she falls into his open arms and Frankie learns that youth's paradise is still ahead of him. Lillian Drew, Richard Travers and Bryant Washburn featured. N. G. C.

Tough Luck Smith—Kalem—November 24.—Smith, anxious to attend a poker game and unable to elude his wife, writes himself a telegram reading, "Come to the office immediately" which he arranges to have Jimmy, a messenger boy, deliver. Jimmy forgets himself and attends a moving picture show and it is only after the Smiths have retired for the night that Jimmy eventually delivers the message. Smith is routed out of bed and compelled to leave for the office. He gets in a mixup which lands him in the police station. The next morning his wife discovers the telegram to have been a forgery, finds him in a cell at the police station and worse still comes upon Jimmy who explains the whole scheme. John Brennan featured.

Mother's Baby Boy—Lubin—November 24.—Percival Pilkins is mother's pet darling. Bill Green and Tom Brown are two rude boys who resent Percy's interference with their wooing of Nell Haldane and they chase him back to his boarding house. Percy telegraphs his mother that his vacation is being ruined and mother promptly sets out to rescue him. When Tom and Bill attack him, later, Nell interferes, thus permitting Percy to escape, followed by Tom. Mother is a little woman and Tom boldly slaps her boy, thinking that she can not resent the act. Mother, however, has brought a prizefighter to act as Percy's bodyguard and he vanquishes Tom and Bill.

He Wanted Chicken—Lubin—November 24.—Tom Renson, a chicken fancier, sends for some prize winners. Ben Boggs, sore at Tom because he believes that Tom is trying to steal his best girl, writes his wife that her husband is a "chicken stealer" and Tom has a terrible time explaining. When Tom goes to the train to get the expected chickens he chances upon a burlesque show, just arriving, and this causes more difficulties, which are eventually explained.

The Scapegoat—Selig—November 24.—There is always enough action in every Tom Mix release to assure its popularity, and this one is no exception. A realistic runaway, lassoing scenes and furious riding, furnish the chief thrills. The plot is rather conventional but is given an unexpected twist at the close. Tom Jackson assumes the blame of his brother's crime and is forced to leave home. He drifts West and settles in a mining town. In time he becomes sheriff and falls in love with Nell Turner. Nell's brother, Jack, joins a band of bank robbers and they are captured by Tom. Nell pleads with her lover to release Jack, and after a struggle with his emotions he does. He feels he has failed in his duty, however, and gives up all that is dear to him to start life anew in another land. C.J.C.

The Old Flute Player—Vitagraph (Two Reels November 24.—Herr Kreutzer, a flute player at a cheap London theater, keeps his beautiful daughter, Anna, in seclusion and one day while walking through the park, he recognizes a certain exalted personage and flees to America with her. On the voyage Anna meets and wins the love of young Vanderlyn, who secures for her a position as companion to his mother. He gives her a ring which his mother has seen and believed to be for her birthday present. The mother sees Anna later with the ring and accuses her of having stolen it, but when Herr Kreutzer reveals himself as Count Otto Von Lich-tenstal, who years ago incurred the emperor's displeasure but is now forgiven, and when her son explains about the ring, Mrs. Vanderlyn gladly approves of the wedding that has been arranged. Edith Storey featured.

The Temple of Moloch—EDISON—NOVEMBER 25.—This single reel picture has three defined purposes; first, to entertain with a well-acted drama; second, to teach a lesson on the dangers to health of working under unsanitary conditions; and third, to boost the "Red Cross Christmas Seal" movement in the fight against tuberculosis. The picture is a worthy and effective contribution towards the furtherance of a movement whose object vitally concerns everyone. Dr. Jordan visits Valatia to investigate the cause of its alarming death rate, and finds it to be the insanitary conditions existing at Harrison Pratt's pottery. He calls on its owner and begs him to improve the pottery and the adjoining hovels in which his employees live, but to no avail. Jordan then establishes a public preventorium and is valiantly assisted in his work by Eloise Pratt. Harrison Pratt remains firm in his refusal to grant Jordan's request, until both Eloise and Alfred Pratt fall victims to the plague. The matter then assume a different light, and on their being cured by Jordan's system, Pratt remodels the pottery and donates a large sum towards the work of fighting tuberculosis. C. R. C.

The Fable of Aggie and the Aggravated Attacks—ESSANAY—NOVEMBER 25.—An unusually good George Ade fable, in which Betty Brown, as Aggie, goes through aggravated attacks of measles, mumps, scarlet rash, photomania, physical culture, actoritis, artaphobia, and winds up with a severe attack of love sickness. N. G. C.

The Girl and the Explorer—KALEM (TWO REELS) NOVEMBER 25.—Millicent Beldon, daughter of a publisher, knows her father is anxious to secure for publication an account of the adventures of Carlton, a famous explorer, and goes to the house in an effort to secure the work. She is mistaken for an applicant for the position of housemaid and, for fun, accepts the position. She meets Carlton and the two fall in love. Beldon, alarmed by his daughter's disappearance, puts the police on the case and next morning when Millicent tears the story out of the paper, Carlton gets another and thus discovers her secret. The girl steals the explorer's story, but her love for him compels her to return it. When the police trace her to the house and would arrest her, Carlton tells her of his love and she accepts him, upon condition that her father publish his story. Tom Moore and Marguerite Courtot featured.

"The Making of Him"—LUBIN—(TWO REELS)—NOVEMBER 25.—George Terwilliger has evolved an excellent story with picturesque naval setting, the moral of the tale being the regeneration of a youth of the idle rich by a charming girl who loves him, but wants to marry a man, not a society doll. Admiring the manly quality of the naval officers, she spurs her lover to effort by threatening to discard him unless he devotes four years to training under the hard discipline of a naval school. It is "hard tack" for the pampered youth, but he submits to the dictum, while the girl, despite the attentions of other lovers, remains faithful to her promise. The picture features Ormi Hawley and Edgar Jones, who are well supported by other famous Lubin players.

The Butterfly's Wings—SELIG—NOVEMBER 25.—Rich interior settings characterize this offering. Bessie Eyton appears to advantage as a society butterfly, a role which suits her admirably. Thomas Santschi, playing opposite her is also well cast as a rough fisherman. The sea coast scenes are carefully selected and the photography clear and sharp throughout. It is an offering which will please all those who like the better class of motion pictures. Gay La Rue, a spoiled society girl, goes to the sea coast to break the monotony of her frivolous life. There she meets Karl, a fisher lad and succeeds in taking him away from Elsa, his sweetheart. Elsa is heartbroken and appeals to Gay to give her lover back to her. At first the butterfly refuses but her better nature wins and she goes away, leaving the lovers in happiness. Amid her old surroundings she knows that in Karl she has met the one man she can love and ceases her flirtations to marry a count who has long courted her but whom she cares little for. The butterfly's wings have been broken. C.J.C.

Netty or Letty—VITAGRAPH—NOVEMBER 25.—Netty and Letty, twins, quarrel continually. At a friend's cottage, Freddy meets Netty and the two are mutally attracted. The other girls send him a note which leads him to approach Letty, whom he believes is Netty. Letty thinks he is trying to flirt with her and summons a policeman, much to the amusement of the watchers. Later when Netty appears Freddy gives her the "cold shoulder." Other complications follow, one character after another getting mixed up, but eventually all is straightened out and Netty and Freddy become sweethearts.

The Way Back—BIOGRAPH—NOVEMBER 26.—An evangelist in the city visits a friend who tells him the story of a young woman, a frequenter of caberets, in whom he is interested. The evangelist doffs his clerical dress and accompanies his friend to the caberet where, meeting he girl, he is able to effect her regeneration. After joining the hand of his friend and the woman in marriage, he abandons his calling as an evangelist to become a novelist. To keep up his work he resorts to stimulants and eventually becomes a drink-sodden outcast. The woman, after her husband's death, becomes a charity worker in the slums, finds the former evangelist and saves him as he once saved her.

Snakeville's Reform Wave—ESSANAY—NOVEMBER 26.—Slippery Slim and Sophie drive to town, and while Sophie is shopping, Slim sneaks over to the saloon for a drink. Here he meets Mustang Pete and in the midst of their merriment Sophie enters and with the aid of a suffragette cleans up the saloon. Sophie then joins the suffragettes and, on election day, they manage to use every woman in the village as a repeat voter, not once or twice, but five or six times, resulting in the town going dry by a large majority. Victor Potel and Margaret Joslin featured. N. G. C.

Was His Decision Right—LUBIN—(TWO REELS)—NOVEMBER 26.—Nance Alcott, "a scarlet woman," is willed a for-tions and later meets Jason, the nephew of a clergyman, who has charge of his sister's boy, deemed an incorrigible. When Jason rescues Lilly at the risk of his own life, Nance thanks him and gratitune, upon condition that she remain unmarried and care for a crippled girl named Lilly. Nance accepts the conditude develops into love. When the minister later meets Nance he recognizes her and though she begs him to keep silence regarding her past, he plans to tell Jason all, though giving Nance three days in which to leave town. When Jason proposes and Nance refuses him, Lilly believes the refusal due to the stipulation of the will and the cripple kills herself that love may have its way. When the minister learns the facts, he believes that he can do less for Nance than the cripple has done and accordingly agrees to keep silence regarding her past and permits her marriage.

Cause For Thanksgiving—Vitagraph—November 26.—Daddy tells Sonny, who wants a baby brother, that one may some day be left on the doorstep. Later Sonny mistakes a Thanksgiving turkey in a basket for "brother," and is so disappointed when he discovers that it is not a baby, that he gladly swaps the turkey for a little pickaninny which Lily Ann, the washwoman's daughter, is drawing in a little cart. Lily Ann returns home with the turkey, but her mother insists on Rastus being returned and starts out to find him. Daddy, at home, nearly faints when Sonny brings home Rastus, but after another exchange has been made mammy gets her little pickaninny back and Sonny is told that Santa Claus may bring him a baby brother. Bobby Conelly featured.

His Old Pal's Sacrifice—Biograph—November 27.—Bob, a member of the underworld, resolves to quit the game. He rescues Lon Riggs, a pal, from death in a fire and sustains some injuries. In the hospital he meets a young nurse to whom he is eventually married, after being aided in his reformation by a police captain. One day Bob finds a pocketbook filled with riches and yields to the temptation to keep it. The woman who lost it, reports the case to the police and the latter set out to find Bob. Meanwhile Riggs enters and hides in Bob's home to escape from the police. When Bob is telling his wife of the pocketbook, Riggs appears and insists that Bob place the pocketbook in his (Riggs') pocket and then points a pistol at him. Just as Bob dazedly acts on the suggestion, the police enter and take Lon away. Bob wins the reward of $500 offered for Riggs' capture and happiness once more reigns in the little home.

Ham, The Iceman—Kalem—November 27.—Ham, to elude Rubberheel, the inspector, shifts from street cleaner to iceman and Bud, his son, overhears his dad making a date with Mrs. Rubberheel, who flirts with him. They agree to meet in a park and later Ham forgets Mrs. Rubberheel and makes a date with Alice, another of his customers. Bud goes home and tells his mother and in the park Dick, Alice's sweetheart, and Mr. Rubberheel meet and fight, each thinking the other Ham. When the two discover their mistake, they pursue Ham, who takes up a position on a hill and slides cakes of ice down upon his pursuers. Mrs. Ham arrives from the other direction, however, and Ham, to escape her, jumps off a bridge. Lloyd V. Hamilton featured.

He Waits Forever—Lubin—November 27.—Jose Suarez, a Mexican, loves Helena Moreno, though the girl's father objects. When Jose determines to leave to find a fortune, he is seen bidding farewell to the girl by her father, and arrested. Later, escaping, Jose goes into the mountains and becomes a miner. Six years elapse and Helena is forced by her father to marry Andres de Romer. Jose, meanwhile, becomes wealthy and is accorded a generalship in the Mexican army, if he will fight for Mexico's freedom. Jose's army wins many victories and, capturing his own town, he hurries to the Moreno home to find Helena, and is stunned to find her married. Jose determines revenge and inviting Moreno, Helena and Andres to a fiesta, he poisons the food and plans to kill them all. Jose, at the critical moment faints, and the waiter gives him a drink from one of the poisoned glasses, and he dies.

A Surprise Party—Selig—November 27.—Two husbands and two wives get mixed up over the purchase of a new hat and some birthday presents in this picture and the complications which result are very humorous. Lyllian Brown Leighton, Elsie Greeson, John Lancaster and Sid Smith have the leading roles. The humor is kept alive throughout the reel and it seems safe to predict that laughs will be numerous in the various houses that show this picture. Mrs. White wants her husband to buy her a hat, but he refuses. Later Mrs. Brown, her neighbor, buys the hat and, when she leaves it in White's office during a rain storm, Mrs. White thinks her husband bought it for her. Her jealousy is further aroused when Mrs. Brown and Mr. White go shopping together and she tells Mr. Brown. They form a plan to catch the false ones together but the plan ends in their own arrest and after being bailed out they learn that the shopping trip was made to buy a birthday present for Mrs. White. All end happily. C. J. C.

The Curing of Myra May—Vitagraph—November 27.—Absorbed in romantic stories Myra May, 14, can think of nothing but chivalry and romance. Grayson, a young city man, is mistaken for a veritable Sir Launcelot. He, being mistaken as to Myra's age, proposes they elope and Myra's brother, Jack, overhears their plan and summons his mother, who leads Myra home thoroughly cured of her morbidly sentimental ideas. She again returns to short dresse and girl playmates of her own age. Norma Talmadge featured.

Little Miss Make-Believe—Biograph—November 28.—A newly rich family send out invitations to meet a princess, who is coming to spend a week with them. On the day of the reception, the princess telephones that she cannot come and at the last moment the children's governess is substituted. A wealthy young bachelor, beloved by all the ladies, becomes infatuated with the make-believe princess and the sisters are furious at the honor showered upon the humble governess. Baron von Metz calls and, seeing the governess, declares "She is not the princess." When the family endeavor to explain that they were deceived, the governess exclaims "You made me pose as the princess to deceive your friends." The baron and other guests have no more use now for the newly rich family and they become social failures, while the governess marries the wealthy bachelor, who really loves her, and becomes not a princess, but his queen.

Broncho Billy's Double Escape—Essanay—November 28.—Broncho Billy, an outlaw, pursued by the sheriff of Bear county, crosses the line to Gulch county, and is captured by the Gulch county sheriff. A deputy from Bear county is summoned, and when he and Broncho Billy stop that night at a hotel, Broncho induces him to remove the handcuffs. In the night the sheriff leaves his prisoner to play poker down stairs, and loses a wad. Broncho, learning of this, takes the sheriff's gun, steals down stairs, holds up the gamblers, regains the money, and without waking his guardian, replaces the loot on the table, and then writes a note, telling the deputy that he has gone to the boundary, and will be waiting there for him. The deputy, overjoyed at having his money returned, wires the Bear county sheriff that his prisoner has escaped, and makes no effort to recapture Broncho. G. M. Anderson featured. N. G. C.

The Last of the Hargroves—Edison—November 28.—Gertrude McCoy and Robert Conness play the leading parts in this feudal-tinted romance, and by their work add an extra charm to a naturally attractive story. The Buckners and Hargroves wage a feudal war and Mrs. Hargrove's dying request is that her daughter Viney be brought up to hate a Buckner. Years afterward Ben Buckner, the sole survivor of the family, returns from school in the East to pay a visit to the scenes of his early boyhood days. The first person he meets is Viney, now a wild, beautiful girl. They fall in love and later on marry, but not before the old feud has been resurrected and finally buried forever. C. R. C.

The Girl at the Throttle—(Third Episode of the "Hazards of Helen") Kalem—November 28.—Blake, a fireman on the run to Daleton, learns that his wife is dangerously ill and Benton, the engineer, allows Blake to go home, intending to pick up a fireman at the next station. A hunter accidentally shoots Benton and the engineer drops unconscious. Rushing to the nearest telegraph station, the hunter tells Helen, the telegrapher, of the runaway train. Helen boards a locomotive, standing on the siding, and starts out to overtake the eastbound express which is in danger of being wrecked. After a perilous ride she succeeds in her mission and her superb heroism again results in her being showered with offers of marriage, but she rejects them all. Helen Holmes featured.

You Can't Beat Them—Lubin—November 28.—Ray Boggs gets a two dollar bill from her husband to go bargain hunting, but when she protests at the "small change," even the two-spot is demanded back. She telephones mother and the two prepare an anonymous letter to arouse Boggs' jealousy. Boggs gets the letter at the office and rushes home, where he learns of the trap set for him, and when his mother-in-law threatens to tell the joke to all the boys Boggs is forced to "come across."

The Servant Girl Legacy—Lubin—November 28.—Mandy Spragg, a domestic slave, spurns her poor fellow laborer, Cy Whitfield, who loves her. When the family returns from an auto ride they find Mandy in the best chair on the front porch and she shows them a letter which indicates that she has become sole heir to her uncle's fortune. Awed by the change in Mandy, the family head not only loans her money, but gives her time in which to go shopping and buy clothing suitable to an heiress. When a telegram arrives from the lawyer saying that the total amount of the fortune is twenty-five dollars, all the members of the family turn from Mandy and she has to console herself by accepting Cy's proposal. A few moments later another telegram is received, saying that the first one is a mistake and that the amount should have been two hundred and twenty-five thousand.

The Fates and Ryan—SELIG—NOVEMBER 28.—Several worthy points appear in this film which lift it out of the ordinary. The opening and closing scenes show the Fates weaving the fortunes of the leading characters; a realistic runaway is shown; a horse of more than ordinary intelligence plays a prominent part and the acting of Stella Razeto and Lamar Johnstone is very human and appealing. Michael Ryan, a mounted policeman is greatly attached to his horse. One day while out riding he saves Mollie Girard from death in a runaway and they are attracted to each other. Mollie's father, a counterfeiter, is cruel to her and she decides to run away from home. Ryan's horse is sold at auction because he is no longer fit for service and Girard buys it. Ryan traps Girard and his band but can do nothing but keep them covered. His police whistle, however, brings his old horse and the animal bears a message calling for help to Mollie. The girl then notifies Ryan's fellow officers and they hurry to the counterfeiters' den and arrest them. Ryan and Mollie discover they love each other and Ryan determines to secure possession of the horse. C. J. C.

Convict, Costumes and Confusion—VITAGRAPH (TWO REELS) NOVEMBER 28.—Leary Mike, a convict, escapes from prison to the city, closely followed by the police. Jones, dressed as Mephisto, goes to a masquerade with a pretty girl. Mrs. Jones follows him. Mike enters the dressing room to escape the police and is compelled to change clothes with Jones. The police follow Mike, and arrest Jones, while Mrs. Jones follows Mike, who jumps aboard an outgoing freight train. Jones and his wife are eventually reconciled and return home. Mike meanwhile breaks up a coon camp meeting, suddenly appearing as the devil, forces the parson to change clothes with him and escapes to the beach, where he dons a woman's bathing suit and flirts with the police, but is eventually suspicioned and arrested. Billy Quirk featured.

His Responsibility — RELIANCE (TWO REELS) NOVEMBER 21. — To provide his heiress wife with the luxuries to which she has been accustomed Wallace speculates heavily and loses. Worse still a friend whom he has entrusted with a large sum of money for investment absconds with the funds. With expenses accumulating and his wife expecting a baby Wallace is nearly distracted. Suicide would render void his insurance policy so the young broker hires a "gunman" to shoot a man wearing a white hat, and carrying a raincoat on passing a given point at 10.30 on a certain night. The "gunman" is arrested while laying in wait. After passing the spot several times Wallace returns home and finds there a letter from the absconder, enclosing a check for $100,000, and stating that he has struck oil in the West and wants to make Wallace his partner.

Love Finds a Way—ROYAL—NOVEMBER 21.—After sub-leasing his apartments a bachelor forgets about it, and returns there one night to sleep. A man and his daughter are occupying them. The father discovers the bachelor sleeping on the mantelpiece in the morning, and demands that he marry the girl. On the way to the minister's the bachelor escapes, and hurries to the home of his fiancee, closely pursued by the angry father. In the meantime the girl meets her fiance. Explanations follow the mix-up and the affair ends in a double wedding.

The Messenger of Gladness—NATURE'S CELEBRITIES — THANHOUSER (SPLIT REEL) NOVEMBER 22.—An unusually large cast is used in this picture, each member of whom is the recipient of some "message of gladness" from little Helen, who has been taught by her parents that Thanksgiving Day is a day on which everybody should be happy and friendly. After a long day's work of dispensing charity and good cheer Helen returns home to a delicious Thanksgiving dinner. Helen Badgely featured.

In the Candlelight—AMERICAN (TWO REELS) NOVEMBER 23.—Marian's father had deserted her mother years before because he thought she was in love with one of his friends. The girl's love affair with a young art student serves to bring her father and the man he thought deceived him together. The father learns of his mistake and the lovers are united. Complete review on page 729.

Sea Nymphs—KEYSTONE (TWO REELS) NOVEMBER 23.—Fatty neglects his wife, and even his mother-in-law, when he spies the attractive Mabel. The girl's father takes a dislike to her stout friend, and introduces Ambrose into the love race. Fatty manages to have his mother-in-law and Ambrose locked in a dressing-room while he and Mabel give a diving exhibition. Mabel's father enlists the muscles of Ambrose, and together they attack Fatty but without making any impression on him. Had the angry parent been wise he would have sought the aid of Fatty's wife and her mother who grow impatient at his flirtation, and demonstrate to the crowd how big men should be whipped.

Our Mutual Girl—CHAPTER 45—RELIANCE—NOVEMBER 23.—Margaret cannot forget the queer old lady resident of the mysterious house. She visits her again, but the woman ejects her when she learns that Margaret has no word of Walter. In an effort to cheer the dejected girl Aunt Abbie suggests a shopping trip to Joseph's on Fifth avenue. A most unexpected thing happens in the famous millinery atelier. An old man, evidently a clerk, turns ashen gray at sight of Margaret, and faints. When he is revived Our Mutual Girl overhears him tell the doctor the story of his past life, and reognizes it as being the masculine edition of the story told her by the old woman. He proves to be Walter Van Horn, the queer old woman's former sweetheart. Margaret orders her automobile, and within an hour the old couple is reunited, having been lost to one another for fifty years.

As a Man Thinketh (So He Is)—BEAUTY — NOVEMBER 24. — Gladys Kingsbury, Edith Borella, Frank Cooley, Hugh Bennett and Fred Gamble form a perfectly balanced cast in this production. There is a great deal of truth in the idea behind it, as stated in the title, and each of the characters are given a human interpretation. Mr. Jones, a very capable but extremely subdued gentleman, whose humble manner has become a fixed habit, is dominated by his wife and imposed upon by his co-workers in the business world, is attracted by the advertisement of a fortune teller and concludes to learn his future. He is informed that he is of "iron will' and destined to govern men. Mr. Jones is impressed and returning home subdues his wife, goes back to work, shows his fellow clerks their proper places, strikes the boss for a raise, is promised the same if he succeeds in having a returned business contract signed. Nothing daunted, Mr. Jones gets it signed, receives a raise, is made head clerk, goes home to his wife, to let her adore him. C. J. C.

Another Chance—MAJESTIC—NOVEMBER 24.—Mason attempts to lead an honest life on being released from jail, but he fails in finding employment and falls before the temptation of securing money by passing bad coins. One day he rescues a newsboy from a tramp, takes him home and his wife cares for him. The former prisoner runs afoul of the law in his illegal transactions. He receives a letter from a motor concern offering him a position and at the same time a detective enters, arrests him, and, leaving the counterfeit coins on the table, begins to search the house. The newsboy reaches through the door, and substitutes the bad coins with a part of his savings. Mason is discharged in court, and reaches the factory in time to take up his new work.

Mrs. Van Ruyter's Stratagem—Thanhouser (Two Reels) November 24.—At the suggestion of Broadhurst, her lawyer, Mrs. Van Ruyter disguises herself as housekeeper and invites her relatives to visit her. The daughter of Mr. Broadhurst, who is a widower, is one day saved from serious injury by Ruth Cloverly, and as a reward the lawyer secures the girl the position of maid in the Van Ruyter household. The wealthy woman's relatives prove to be unlimited in their sweetness to their "aunt," but the "housekeeper" receives only sharp words and abuse from them. The butler, who is jealous of Broadhurst's admiration for Ruth, attempts to discredit the girl by charging her with stealing. Mrs. Van Ruyter who knows more of the affair than the schemers think, clears the house of her selfish relatives and announces Ruth as her heiress.

The Archaeologist — American — November 25.—Abounding in beautiful exterior backgrounds and containing a vein of humor that serves its purpose excellently, this production is one that is really worth while. Ed Coxen, Winnifred Greenwood and Charlotte Burton have the leading roles and George Fields is amusing as a negro servant, especially in his dash to get away from what he thinks is a spirit. A playwright and his daughter, May, live in a bungalow near the sea. May and her chum meet Billy Green a student of archaeology, who is so interested in his work that he does not notice them. She declares she will win him and to accomplish her purpose "plants" several ancient vases in her garden. He is greatly interested in digging them up but does not appear to notice her. The playwright also takes to digging but after he gathered what he thinks is a valuable collection he finds that he has to foot the bill for them, as May charged them to his account. May poses as an ancient statue and frightens their negro servant so that he flees to the city. Billy worships the statue and when it comes to life he finds that he has really loved the original all the time. The playwright pays the bill as he is happy to think he is to have a rich son-in-law. C. J. C.

The Cross in the Desert—Broncho (Two Reels)—November 25.—Sam Higgins, a grocery clerk, sends his wife to Arizona for her health. Unable to pay his rent he is ordered to vacate the cottage owned by Hecker, a railroad superintendent. Big Jim Dougherty, king of hobos, hears Sam's story, and tells him how to reach Arizona by freight. Hecker's orders forbid tramps riding on trains, and Sam is thrown off in the desert. Dougherty and his pals find his dead body and bury it, placing a wooden cross above the grave. Hecker, called out on the desert division, makes the trip on a handcar. Dougherty captures him, forces him to change clothes with him, and leaves him stranded. The money found in his clothes is given to Higgins' wife. Some time later the hobos find Hecker's skeleton clinging to the cross over Higgins' grave.

They Never Knew—Reliance—November 25.—The engagement of Ben Wilson and Rose Meadows is broken because of a quarrel between the two families. Ben returns to the city, and Rose remains in the country. One night some time later Ben visits a roadhouse, and there finds Rose in the power of Carrol Walker, a rake of the worst type. He rescues her, and they start out for the Meadows home. Rose happens to think of the note she left stating that she was eloping with the man she loved, and hesitates to return. Ben convinces her that he answers the description, and they hurry to the nearest parsonage. Not having known of Carrol her parents welcome Ben, and the two families become reconciled.

The Mills of the Gods—Domino (Two Reels) November 26.—Spiegel, a miser, looses his wife for want of proper medical care, and the Vardels adopt the little girl, Mildred. Conrad Vardel, falls in love with the miser's daughter. Cyril, the miser's son, becomes a drunkard and gambler. Vardel writes Spiegel for an extension on his note, and the latter determines to use this as a lever to secure his daughter. She, however, refuses, to return to her father. Angered, he determines to collect on the note. Vardel, unknowingly, has dropped a bill, and Spiegel returns at night to get it. His son, Cyril, attacks and robs him, and throws the body into the basin where it is found in the morning by Vardel. The miser regains consciousness only long enough to bequeath his wealth to Mildred.

A Crook's Sweetheart—Kay Bee (Two Reels) November 27.—Jim and Flora rob a diamond-broker's office, and Jim promises to divide the loot later. When he calls at Flora's apartment he finds the "Dip" there. Flora learns Jim has another sweetheart so runs away with the "Dip," but first informs the police on Jim. He is sentenced to prison, but escapes from the deputy on the way. Learning that Flora and the "Dip" are married he seeks out their home, and is just about to shoot through the window when a policeman's bullet kills him.

The Hop Smugglers — Reliance — November 27.—Helen's application for a position on a newspaper is met with the reply that she must first prove herself capable by bringing in a live news story. She starts out on the trail of a band of opium smugglers operating on the Mexican border, and, through befriending one of the Chinatown denizens, she learns that the drug is hidden in old logs and floated down the canal. Helen informs Sikes, the revenue officer, of her find, and he co-operates with her in capturing the band. Her exclusive story for her paper proves to be a winning recommendation for her employment.

The Kafir's Skull—Reliance (Two Reels) November 28.—Brandon writes his niece that he is shipping from Africa an enormous diamond hidden in a Kafir's skull, and that he is having the baggage addressed to an assumed name. He adds that he will follow on a later steamer and call for the baggage at the express office. Healey, who has been waiting for a chance to steal the diamond attacks Brandon on shipboard, and in the struggle they both go overboard. Healey reaches shore alive, and searches Brandon's body for the diamond but fails to find it. Elsie Brandon and her sweetheart, Jack Dwyer, are puzzled on not meeting Brandon at the landing. Some time afterwards they attend the express company's sale of uncalled for packages in the hope of being able to recognize and buy Brandon's. Though they do not know Healey they notice his eagerness in bidding on a certain bundle, and outbid him. While taking it home they are assaulted by the man but Jack beats him off. He makes another attempt to secure the bundle, and this time is arrested. Elsie finds the diamond in the luggage, and after their marriage she and Jack read of Healey's conviction for Brandon's murder.

A Corner in Hats—Komic—November 29.— Henry's wife buys a little dog, and conceals it from her surly husband. The canine has a weakness for stealing hats, every time he brings one home Henry finds it, looks up its owner, and whips him, thinking that he has been visiting his wife. One day the dog takes off the hats in the ante-room of the police station, and brings them home. When Henry finds them on the parlor floor he swears revenge on the whole police force, and blows up the station. He returns home and finds a stack of hats that nearly touches the ceiling. As he prepares to despatch his "unfaithful" wife, the police enter and arrest him. On the way to the station they meet the dog enroute for home with another hat.

The Sisters—Majestic (Two Reels) November 29.—May and her younger sister, Carol, live in a small town. Frank's love affair with Carol is broken up by the appearance of George, a city man. When the latter meets May he drops Carol, and later marries her sister. Carol becomes Frank's wife, and a year later, the mother of a baby. May's baby dies at birth, and the doctor, fearing to break the news to her, substitutes it with Carol's child until May is well enough to be told the truth. Carol bears her sacrifice bravely though her sister will not allow her to touch the baby. One day May overhears the doctor and nurse in conversation, and learns of her baby's death. She returns Carol's baby, and the sisters become reconciled.

Black Hands—STERLING COMEDY—NOVEMBER 23.—Mr. Craig has a dispute with an Italian organ grinder and receives a threatening note. Later, Craig's baby gets stuck-up with jam and leaves the imprint of his hand on the front door and all over the house, then finally wanders off to the attic and goes to sleep. Craig comes home and upon finding the black hand sign upon the door and his son missing, becomes frantic. He summons Skylark Fumes, a famous detective, to find his child. The detective, decides there must be at least a thousand black handers in the gang. He immediately summons the entire police force by means of trained police pigeons. The police after many mishaps, arrive and after many deductions and clever police work, the child is finally found.

The Master Key—UNIVERSAL—NOVEMBER 23.—James Gallon had a habit of putting down in his diary things that he could not or did not want to express in speech. Gleaning through this diary we find that he still fears Wilkerson, and trusts his stalwart engineer, John Dore, to protect "The Master Key" to his daughter Ruth's happiness. Further on in the book he writes that he has seen Wilkerson by night, and wonders how long it will be before he appears in daylight. It is true that Gallon has seen Wilkerson's face, and it was not only an apparition as he at first thought, but a healthy and revengeful Wilkerson who at once wires to Jean Darnell in New York that he has found his man. With the exception of the information that Miss Darnell has some strange influence over Wilkerson and a passion for money she remains a mystery person.

The Empire of Illusion—VICTOR (TWO REELS) NOVEMBER 23.—Second release of the "Terrence O'Rourke, Gentleman Adventurer" series. O'Rourke and his rescue party arrive in the desert in time to save the oasis from the Arabs, and insure its emperor, the Princess' brother, of safety. The Prince is angry at this because he had hoped for the brother's death, and he bribes the Arab chief to abduct the boy. Chambret and the Prince become involved in a duel in which the Prince is killed. The Arab chief falls in love with the Princess, attempts to abduct her, and O'Rourke kills him. The party then retreats before the attack of the rest of the tribe, and reach the boats in safety. O'Rourke and the Princess are now free to love as they will.

The Mysterious Rose—GOLD SEAL—(TWO REELS)—NOVEMBER 24.—In fear of certain information that he knows the district attorney's son possesses, the ward boss approaches "My Lady Raffles" with a proposition to put the boy out of the way, but she refuses to become involved in the affair. The young fellow is in love with the clever female crook, and threatens suicide when she breaks with him. That night "My Lady Raffles" and her accomplices rob the attorney's safe. On leaving she accidentally drops a rose on the floor. Outside the ward boss' "gunman" sees the district attorney's son in his room and fires, killing him. Detective Kelley, assigned to the case, traces his clues to the ward boss and "My Lady Raffles," and draws in his net. The politician is caught in it, but the woman makes a clever escape.

As We Journey Through Life—NESTOR—NOVEMBER 24.—Old Uncle Eli sits down in his arm chair, opens the family album and becomes lost in memories of the past. Each picture in the book represents some epoch in his life, which passes before him in a panoramic vision. His musings are interrupted by the patter of little feet, and his grandson climbs up on his knee begging to be told a story.

The Heiress And The Cook—ECLAIR (TWO REELS) NOVEMBER 25.—A bogus count comes to America to make a rich marriage and is introduced into the family of a rich manufacturer whose daughter is being courted by a young American lawyer. In order to impress the shallow-pated mother, the nobleman enlists the aid of a spiritualist charlatan, who is instructed to state that the girl is pre-destined to marry a nobleman of distinction. At the last minute the girl hesitates to consent and her mother suggests that the aid of the spirit be again invoked. In the household is a little slavey who overhears the plot which the bogus count is endeavoring to formulate with the medium, and informs both the young lawyer and her policeman lover of it. The slavey takes the place of the supposed invoked spirit and coming into full view at the seance, denounces the count, who is taken into custody together with the charlatan spiritualist and incarcerated. The parvenu mother and father are thoroughly disillusioned and the young lawyer wins his bride.

The Tricky Flunkie—JOKER—NOVEMBER 25.—Ernie, the flunkie in a hash-house, is in love with Betty, the proprietor's daughter. Their little romance is intruded upon by the angry father who has another man picked out for his daughter. Ernie tries to hang himself, but can't die. The proprietor, in the meantime, has notified the sheriff and minister of Ernie's actions. When they arrive the boy manages to put all of them in the lake except Betty and the minister. A wedding ceremony is then performed.

Human Hearts—IMP (THREE REELS) NOVEMBER 26.—Adapted from Hal Reid's celebrated melodrama of the same name. Tom Logan, a blacksmith, is in love with Ruth, a country girl. One day he meets and falls in love with a beautiful city girl, and they become married. After her child's birth the wife becomes tired of country life, and consents to elope to the city with a former lover. To prevent Tom's following them the man decides to kill him, but, by mistake, kills his aged father instead. The couple accuse Tom of the crime, and he receives a life sentence on their evidence. Years pass. Tom's mother, now blind, appeals to the governor for Tom's pardon, and it is granted on the evidence of a tramp whom Tom once befriended, and who was a witness to the murder. Tom demands his child of his unfaithful wife. In the struggle which follows the interloper accidentally shoots the woman, is arrested, and confesses. Tom returns home, and finds that Ruth is still true to him.

Dot's Elopment—Sterling—November 26.—Gus asks Dot's father for her hand, but is refused. Father's choice is Max, who holds a mortgage over him. Gus returns home and finds a letter stating that he has fallen heir to $50,000. He informs Dot. They mount a sprinkling cart nearby and dash to the minister's. They are seen by Max who tells Dot's parents. They dash after them in their machine, but the elopers sprinkle the street, causing the pursuers' machine to skid. In the wild ride Gus loses his letter. It is found by the father who settles the question by beating up Max and tearing up the mortgage. Father and mother then dash into the minister's house and greet Gus like a long lost son.

In Taxi 23—Nestor—November 27.—The hired man is in love with the farmer's daughter, Victoria, and takes her with him to the great city. A crafty villain follows them to the city. Eddie, the hired man, obtains a job driving the delivery auto of a Dutch grocery while Victoria becomes a clerk in the same store. The villain abducts Victoria and takes her to his lair in a taxi. Eddie pursues in the dinky grocery store machine. After an exciting rescue, he sees to it that the villain and his confederates are lodged in jail.

"Sis Dobbins, Oil Magnate"—Powers—November 27.—In California lives the Dobbins family,—father, mother and daughter Sally. The village storekeeper has a son whom Sal has liked all her life. He is studying law. All of them are in straightened circumstances. An oil expert from the city visits the vicinity and finds oil traces. He buys land cheap. He offers to buy the ranch. The old man decides to sell it. A few days later, Sal, in a tree stealing apples, hears the oil expert tell the man from town about the oil. As the old man is going to town to sign the deed, she takes out after him, and prevents the signing. Shortly after this, they put in wells of their own, and become wealthy. Sal goes away to schol and begins a new life. Three years elapse. Sal returns, cultured and wealthy. The young lawyer has meanwhile, taken out his degree. She finds a great change in the young lawyer, who has lost his courage and acts distant and shy. At last she slips up to her room, dresses as she was before the oil strike, and wins his proposal.

The Brand of His Tribe—101 Bison—(Two Reels)—November 28.—Lieutenant Wilcox falls into the hands of Wolftail, is forced to marry the chief's daughter, and a year later becomes the father of a boy. Duncan, an old pal of Wilcox's, leads a charge on the Indians and takes Wilcox and his son back to camp. The old chief attempts to recover the child and in the battle which follows Wilcox is killed. Twenty years later Wilcox, Jr., returns from West Point and becomes engaged to Major Green's daughter. Duty compels Duncan to tell Green of the boy's birth and the major forbids the marriage. Enraged at this, Wilcox returns to the Indians. Marie, the major's daughter, is taken prisoner in a raid and is overjoyed to find her lover in the camp. A rescue party finds the two together. Marie refuses to give up Wilcox and the major finally agrees to their marriage.

He Married Her Anyhow—Joker—November 28.—The chief of detectives gets an order that the "Zebra" and his yeggmen must be rounded up immediately. The Chief is also given $1,000,00 to offer his men as a reward for the capture of the gang. The "Zebra" learns this and plots to steal the reward. The Chief's daughter, Mandy, and Tom, are in love. The Chief opposes their lovemaking. The "Zebra" and his gang come to rob the Chief. Tom spots them. He notifies the police. While waiting he locks the "Zebra" in a closet. When the other yeggmen come into the room with the bound and furious Chief, they do not recognize Tom. He is disguised in the "Zebra's" clothes. Taking advantage of the helpless Chief, a minister is called and the loving pair are married. The yeggmen are celebrating the marriage of their supposed "Zebra" to Mandy when the police arrive. Blessing is backed up with the $1,000.00 reward.

The Heart of the Night Wind—VICTOR—(TWO REELS)—NOVEMBER 27.—Mrs. Daley, wife of the lumber camp foreman, adopts Night Wind, a wild, fearless girl brought up by a Siwash. One day the camp's new owner, Walter Sandry, appears and takes up the reins of foremanship. He rids himself of the contemptuous name of "Easterner" by whipping the camp bully. Walter admires Night Wind and one day kisses her. Among the Indians this is equivalent to an engagement, and the girl looks upon Sandry as "her man." Dolly Ordway, an artist in search of local color, comes to the camp and attempts to infatuate Walter. This brews trouble, which reaches a crisis in Dolly's inducing the lumberjacks to strike, thus tying up Walter's contracts. Night Wind secures the aid of the Indians in carrying on the work, saves Walter's business from ruin, and is rewarded with his love.

The Ghost of the Mine—ECLAIR—NOVEMBER 29.—While inspecting an old mine left him as part of an inheritance, a young city fellow is startled to see in the distance the astral form of a pretty Indian maiden. That night the old half-breed caretaker tells him the story of how the boy's uncle, years, before, barely escaped being hung for a murder by the spirit of the dead girl appearing to his fiancee, and leading her to the hiding place of the real murderer. Ever since that time the Indian girl's spirit has guarded the mine.

The Blighted Spaniard—L KO—NOVEMBER 29.—Sunshine, the village beauty, and Tomalio are in love. Under her window he plays love tunes much to the distress of the neighbors. Tomalio's only rival is Bombardio. He follows Tomalio's example and plays love lyrics to be his beloved one. On his way home from one of his unsuccessful attempts to court the beautiful Sunshine, he accidentally stumbles into the cave of a band of Federal spies. He bargains with the spies to kidnap Tomalio. The tables are turned and all his base designs are perpetrated upon himself.

Lights and Shadows — REX — (TWO REELS)—NOVEMBER 29.—Eve's guardian, Matilde, warns the girl against entering cafes to sell flowers, and tells her the story of how her mother's life was ruined by Bentley, a man of good family, who was disowned for marrying a stage performer. Eve risks a trip to a cafe and on reutrning finds Matilde dead. She starts out to find her father's relations and, becoming stranded on the way, joins a theatrical troupe. Gordon, its manager, falls in love with her, but she repulses him, thinking him married. She finds her father, who is now sole heir of the Bentley fortune, and he insists that she marry Austin, to whom he is indebted. Learning from an old paper that Gordon's wife has been dead for some time, Eve realizes that his intentions were honarable, meets him at the theater where he is now starring in a big hit, and they shortly come to an understanding, in which Eve figures as a bride-to-be.

The Man Who Could Not Lose—Favorite Players (Five Reels).—A young author who wishes to marry the publisher's daughter, dreams that he is very lucky on the turf, and that he becomes a millionaire. He awakes to find his dream shattered, but he is happy when he is told that he can really marry the girl of his dreams. Complete review on page 734 of this issue.

Box Office

Life's Shop Window (Five Reels).—The events that lead up to the clandestine marriage of a servant in the house of an English countryman to a well-to-do boarder, who is learning the art of farming, consume the first part of this picture. Then he departs to make a home for her in America. Shortly afterwards, the girl gives birth to a child, and her employer, not believing that she ever married, drives her from his house. She goes to America and lives happily with her husband until an old acquaintance from England appears. His stories and his experiences attract her and she consents to leave the place with him. How she returns because of her child forms a very pretty finale.

Eclectic

The Toreador's Oath—Pathe (Three Reels).—Asta Nielsen, the famous European actress, is featured in this remarkable drama of "Sunny Spain." As the title indicates, bull-fighters play a prominent part in the story, and a censored but still intensely interesting bull-fight is seen. As the exterior scenes were taken in the exact localities represented, correct atmosphere is an assured thing, and it helps considerably in sustaining the romantic spirit of the play. Miss Nielsen fits the part of Juanita as though it were created for her, and her style of portrayal is in perfect harmony with the environment. Briefly, the story is of a vow taken by Gayetano and Juanita, pledging that death only shall separate them. Manuel poisons the husband's mind, and he casts off Juanita. She revenges herself on Manuel by attracting his attention at the critical moment in a bull-fight. She then entices Gayetano to the spot where they had vowed eternal love, and fulfills the oath by stabbing him. C. R. C.

Perils of Pauline—Pathe (Two Reels).—Pauline this time courts danger in the form of a submarine descent. The release is one of the most unique and interesting. The plot, also, differs a little from its predecessors. Although Owen is as keen as ever to have Pauline done away with, the means he employs in this episode is not his own idea, but is the grand finale of the plans of a band of foreigners who are commissioned by one of the European countries to see that the torpedo test proves a failure. At the last moment they learn that Owen is willing to pay a large sum to have Pauline disappear forever, and decide to kill two birds with one stone by having her accompany Lieutenant Summers when he tests his newly invented tornedo. The manner in which the two "birds" escape from the submerged boat makes a wonderful picture. C. R. C.

The Coming Power (Four Reels).—The plot of this production deals with politics and an honest man, who is candidate for governor. Under a campaign in which he makes speeches of wonderful strength and which advocates the triumph of right and justice, he is elected. A complete review will be found on page 736 of this issue.

Paramount

The Man from Home—Lasky (Five Reels).—Ethel Simpson and her brother are sent to Europe by their father. During their absence, he is killed in an accident, and David Vorhees Pike, a country lawyer, is appointed their guardian. In Russia Lord Hawcastle, an English nobleman, who is selling machinery to the government, is in love with Helene Ivanoff, the wife of an underclerk. The pair manage to send Ivanoff to Siberia on a "drummed up" charge. They then go to Italy, where Hawcastle attempts to marry his son to Ethel, whom they meet. The girl writes to Pike telling of her engagement and he at once comes to Italy. On the way he becomes acquainted with Grand Duke Vasili of Russia. Ivanoff escapes and goes to Italy, where Pike hides him. As it is a penal offense to harbor a convict, Hawcastle threatens to expose Pike unless he consents to Ethel's marriage. Ivanoff is prevented from killing Hawcastle and his wife by Pike. The grand duke manages to free Ivanoff, and Ethel realizes that the man she really loves is Pike.

Sawyer

Oath of the Sword—Japanese-American (Three Reels).—Hisa and Masao promise to marry just before the latter leaves for America to attend the University of California. While at the university he takes many prizes for his athletic and swimming powers, which he demonstrates in contests. Hisa is made sad by the death of her father and just before he passed away he administered to her the oath of the sword, which binds her to commit hara kiri in case she sins. Masao meets Captain Doane and his wife and later, Doane's ship is wrecked on the shore of Japan. He meets Hisa; they fall in love and are married. Doane assumes charge of the fishing industry on the coast, completely forgetting his wife. At the end of his four-year course Masao returns to Japan to marry his sweetheart, only to find her wedded to another man. A fight between the two men results in Doane's death, and when Masao turns toward Hisa, he finds that she has been true to the oath of the sword and has killed herself for having been false to him.

Miscellaneous

Julius Caesar—George Kleine (Six Reels).—Before his twentieth birthday, Caesar marries Lucius Cinna, but because of the bitter animosity existing between Sulla, dictator of Rome, and Lucius, the marriage is annulled. Caesar leaves Rome, vowing that it shall hear of him again. Twenty years later, upon the death of Sulla, Caesar returns and marries Calpurnia, as the first step to force himself into power. He then forms an alliance with Pompey and Crassus, and turns his ruthless ambition to greater fields. He leads an expedition into western Europe, during which his life is almost taken by a beautiful Druidess. He is saved, however, by Calpurnia, and returns triumphant to Rome, after a series of brilliant battles. Pompey grows jealous of his increasing power, and determines to dethrone him. Mark Anthony warns Caesar, without avail. Caesar tells his soldiers of the state of affairs, and they declare that without Caesar there is no Rome, so all cross the Rubicon. The senate declares him a traitor, but the populace proclaim him a hero. The struggle for the mastery of the world begins, and at its end Pompey's army is scattered, and the leader flees to Egypt. Caesar returns to Rome to be made dictator for life. In 44 B. C. Caesar has become a wise ruler, but is murdered by Brutus and a number of his followers, and the city is in a state of riot and murder.

A Phenomenal Success!

Thanhouser's Greatest Photoplay

The first episode of Zudora was released Nov. 23rd. The tremendous enthusiasm that greeted Episode No. 1 at the theatres in New York, Chicago and in other cities throughout America stamps this newest Thanhouser production a phenomenal success.

It is only natural that a photoplay created and written by two such noted authors as Harold MacGrath and Daniel Carson Goodman, should meet with pronounced success. This stupendous serial is now running at the better theatres. The story is appearing in the biggest metropolitan newspapers. Such wonderful cooperation and a play of extraordinary merit have made this Thanhouser's GREATEST Photoplay.

An exceptional cast including Marguerite Snow, Harry Benham and James Cruze interpret this play with all the effects which the authors intended. The entire production will take 20 episodes of 2 reels each. A new episode is being released each week. Exhibitors who are seeking a powerful box office attraction can arrange Zudora bookings by applying to the Thanhouser-Syndicate representative at any Mutual Exchange in America. Zudora is an independent release and may be obtained regardless of the regular program being used. Book NOW!

Mysticism Pervades Third Zudora Film

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

THE strange mysticism and trickery, which made the first and second episodes of the Thanhouser serial "Zudora" unusual, are again to be found in "The Mystery of the Dutch Cheese Maker," which is the title of the third episode in the adventures of "Zudora."

This installment of the serial is, like the others, complete in itself, though it really forms a part of the continued story, which runs through all twenty episodes of the interesting story being told by Daniel Carson Goodman.

Less of the occult and mysticism of the orient pervades this installment, for the chief incidents in this story are laid in modern situations in New York City, with characters of the present day, though there is enough of the strange and unusual to make the picture decidedly out of the ordinary.

The Thanhouser favorites, Marguerite Snow, James Cruze and Harry Benham, are of course, the featured players, though several of the other characters seen in this episode do splendid work, and are really entitled to no little praise for their characterizations.

Hassan Ali, Zudora's uncle, dons a disguise in the early part of the picture for the purpose of following Zudora, and discovers her holding a tryst with her lover, John Storm. When the sweethearts part, Hassan Ali follows Storm to the humble store of Hans Gynt, a dutch cheese maker, and there sees Storm purchase a package of cheese.

In the basement, beneath the cheese maker's shop, resides Bengal, a poor inventor, who has spent his life endeavoring to make artificial diamonds. His final experiment proves successful, and he is delighted to discover that he has, at last, produced several perfect gems in his electric furnace.

Seeking someone to market the stones for him, Bengal encounters Hassan Ali and, after explaining his wonderful invention, induces the latter to market the stones.

Both Bengal and Hassan Ali are amazed to discover, next day, that all the stones which had been locked within a small cupboard in Bengal's rooms have disappeared and when, a day or two later, another set of stones disappears in a similar manner, the two decide that a clever thief is taking them and set a trap to catch him.

When the third set of stones disappears without the trap being sprung, Hassan Ali accidentally discovers one of the diamonds in the pound of cheese which John Storm has just purchased in the little shop above. Storm is arrested and taken to jail, and Zudora, his sweetheart, sets out to solve the mystery.

Hassan Ali endeavors to convince Bengal that Zudora is an accomplice of Storm's, when she visits the Bengal rooms to search for clues to the mystery. The girl, however, eventually obtains leave to work out the theory which she has, and later she visits the Bengal chambers with a detective from headquarters. Suddenly suspicious that something is within the closet in which the diamonds are kept, she opens the door a mere trifle, peers within, and is amazed to behold a small mouse running about the closet shelf.

Later she overcomes her natural fear of the little animal and, reaching within, draws it forth, when she discovers that its nose is gummy from the cheese which it has been eating in the cheese shop above, and that in nosing about the cupboard shelf a diamond had stuck to its nose.

Calling a detective and Bengal, she displays the mouse, the diamond still adhering to its nose and declares "here is your culprit." This discovery naturally results in John Storm being freed from jail, the cheese maker being relieved of suspicion and Zudora is one nearer to the solution of twenty mysteries which she has undertaken to solve.

Pathe Lead Off to the War

If Miss Eleanor Woodruff, Pathe leading lady, holds to her decision to go to the European war as a nurse the world of the screen will suffer a severe loss. Though Miss Woodruff did not get her name in the bright lights on Broadway before her advent into the screen world, she played important parts in "The Gamblers," "Beverly of Graustark," "The Spendthrift," "The Five Frankfurters," and in stock. At the suggestion of some of her friends she tried the pictures and became an instantaneous success. Wonderfully versatile, her chief charm lay in her portrayal of emotional parts. Some of her best known films have been as "Katrina" in "The Last Volunteer;" as "Beth" in "All Love Excelling;" as "Mrs. Stevens" in "The Stain;" as "Helen" in "The Ticket of Leave Man," and others. She has just finished a part in another large production staged and produced for Pathe by George Fitzmaurice, which will be released soon.

Premier of "Damon and Pythias"

In accordance with its announcement that productions of the new photo-play "Damon and Pythias" would be made simultaneously in the high class theaters throughout the country, the Universal Film Company this week leased the Fine Arts theater in Chicago. The first presentation will take place there December 7, following the premier in New York on November 30 at the New York theater.

Two Multiples at Vitagraph Theater

The Vitagraph Theater, New York City, offered another change of program, beginning Sunday, November 22, which included the feature pictures, "The Sage Brush Gal," a drama in three parts, and "The Man Behind the Door," a four-part picturization of Archibald Clavering Gunter's entertaining story of the same name.

"The Sage Brush Gal" is a drama of the West during the early 50's, picturized from Frederick Chapin's story by Doris Schroeder and produced by Rollin S. Sturgeon under whose direction "Captain Alvarez" and "The Little Angel of Canyon Creek" were screened. The story is told of a party of automobilists, while the chauffeur is repairing a break, by a character, typical of the early California days, and is replete with dramatic episodes characteristic of the time. "The Sage Brush Gal" is a cleverly conceived screen story, a photographic achievement whose scenes are vividly realistic, presented by a cast from the western Vitagraph company, including: Mary Ruby, George Kunkel, William Burke, Myrtle Gonzalez, George Holt, J. A. McGuire, Dan Duffy and Otto Lederer.

Grandin Film Through Warner's

Miss Ethel Grandin, until recently leading woman of the Universal-Imp Company and Ray C. Smallwood, both of the Smallwood Film Corporation, announce that this company will release two one-reel subjects a week to Warner's Features through the United program. Miss Grandin will have one release a week under the brand name of Grandin films and the second release will be a farce comedy, the brand name of which has not as yet been selected. The first Grandin release on the United program will be "The Adopted Daughter," a three-part photoplay featuring Ethel Grandin in a dual character, which will be released December 14. Although only twenty years of age, Miss Grandin has been prominently featured with the Imp Company, the New York Motion Picture Company and the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for a period of four years. She will be particularly remembered as having played the leading female role in "Traffic in Souls." Before taking up motion picture work, Miss Grandin was on the legitimate stage having been with Chauncey Olcott two seasons and with Joseph Jefferson the same length of time. For a year prior to her motion picture engagement, she was featured in a vaudeville sketch playing the Orpheum and United time.

Ethel Grandin.

New Pathe Serial

It is announced that with the ending of "The Perils of Pauline," Pathe will release another serial with substantially the same cast, but showing adventures of a different sort. The remarkable success of the "Perils" has been the cause of many requests from the exhibitors for another Pathe serial with the same "punches" that have characterized the serial just ending.

"The Best Man" Splendid Offering

Reviewed By Charles R. Condon

MELODRAMA and comedy bordering on farce make an excellent team when allied in one picture and correctly handled. The greatest danger in having a picture composed entirely of either is of its becoming tiresome, but when both qualities are used in one film they afford variety in emotions, and give each other force by contrast. One who doubts this should see "The Best Man," a two-reel Edison comedy-drama to be released on December 12.

It is one of the best pictures released by this company for some time, and yet it contains nothing really sensational, nor anything excrutiatingly funny. There are two distinct stories in the picture, one concerning George Hayne, a German, who leaves his native land to marry in this country, and the other as to Cyril Gordon, a member of the secret service. Both of these parts are taken by Marc MacDermott because the climax hinges on a case of mistaken identity. Double exposure and trick photography are not resorted to, as the story does not necessitate the meeting of Hayne and Gordon in order to deliver its punch.

One of the tense moments in Edison's "Who Goes There?"

When one thinks, in retrospect, of how simple the plot actually is, and of how much keen enjoyment is derived from it by brainy direction and good acting it moves him to inwardly congratulate Charles Brabin and Marc MacDermott on their work. The arrangement of the scenes also plays an important part in the film's success. Just after the strongly dramatic scenes reach a respective crisis, the tension is broken by cutting in with a scene or two of comedy, and then returning to the melodramatic side of the story. In this way one's interest is kept at its highest point throughout the picture.

Gertrude McCoy plays the lead, opposite Mr. MacDermott, in the part of Cecilia Jefferson, the young girl, who to satisfy her ambitious mother (Mrs. William Bechtel) consents to marry a fortune whose owner she has never seen. Robert Brower as Holman, the master crook, and Duncan McRae as Heath, his lieutenant, are seen in two of the prominent roles in the melodramatic theme. The comedy end of the picture, Marc conducts all by himself.

There is but one inharmonious note in the plot's entire construction. Gordon, after substituting the fake cipher for the incriminating one, lingers in the hallway until the trick is discovered, instead of making his getaway while the road is clear. It is necessary, as is shown by later developments, that the crooks be enabled to follow him, but this little stumbling block could have been cleared without his wait in the hall, and then his flight with the whole party at his heels.

Scene from Edison's "Who Goes There?"

Much against her wishes Cecilia Jefferson consents to marry a wealthy German, George Hayne, whom she has never seen. In compliance with Mrs. Jefferson's instructions Hayne embarks for this country, and, on landing, hurries to a hotel to dress for his wedding. The treachery of a catch-lock makes him a prisoner in one of the clothes-closets, and, after considerable time and energy has been spent, he manages to break down the door. He then completes his dressing, and rushes post haste for the church.

The constable is defied in Edison's "Who Goes There?"

In the meantime a number of things have happened which vitally concern Hayne's happiness and future. Cyril Gordon, a secret service man, is assigned the task of spiriting a certain cipher message out of the hands of a band of clever crooks. He succeeds in doing so, jumps into a carriage in front of the house, and speeds away the men in close pursuit. They overtake the carriage, but, by this time, Gordon has disguised himself with a mustache and goatee, and they give up the chase, thinking that they have been following the wrong man.

According to previous instructions the cabman drives direct to the church, and halts. The wedding party, waiting in front of the church mistake him for Hayne, and he receives a royal greeting. He is about to explain the mistake when he discovers among the crowd a fellow named Heath, who is a member of the band from whom he has just escaped. Because of of the grave importance of the message he is carrying, Gordon submits to the ceremony, and becomes the husband of a girl he had never heard of until five minutes before.

After the home celebration the couple leave on their honeymoon, and on the train Cecilia learns that she has not married Hayne, but a man of whom she knows nothing. Heath is a passenger on the same train, and Gordon decides to slip off and lose him. Cecilia insists on accompanying him, and they make their way to secret service headquarters together. After resigning themselves to their peculiar positions the couple discover that they really love each other. Poor Hayne, in the meantime, has arrived at the Jefferson home, and received a hearty laugh in answer to his statement that he has come to marry Cecilia.

French Director at Peerless

Maurice Tourneur, chief director of the Peerless studio in Fort Lee, N. J., is a newcomer in the American moving picture field. Though still young in years —being only 32—his career from the start has been most artistic. Having completed his studies as an artist he worked seven years with Antoine (the French Belasco); then two years at the Odeon Theater in Paris, and for the last two years has devoted his services to directing for the Eclair Company, at its French studio. "Being a great admirer of D. W. Griffith," said Mr. Tourneur recently, "I had always been possessed with a strong desire to come to America. I felt there was something lacking to our French qualities and this could only be remedied by a personal study in this country. I was only awaiting the opportunity, which was afforded me by Charles Jourjon, president of the Eclair Film Company, at the time when, in conjunction with Jules Brulatour, he was promoting the Peerless proposition, whose new studio has been placed under my direction. The World Film Corporation has already released three of Mr. Tourneur's productions, "Mother," "The Man of the Hour," and "The Wishing Ring."

Maurice Tourneur.

New Reliance Serial

George Randolph Chester, one of the best known writers in America, has been signed by the Reliance Motion Picture Company to write a fifteen-instalment serial entitled "Runaway June," which will be ready for release early in January. Mr. Chester's fame is world-wide on account of his "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" series which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and book form. Although "J. Rufus Wallingford" is the best known of Mr. Chester's works, his "Cordelia Blossom" and "The Jingo" also lead toward fame. In writing "Runaway June," Mr. Chester has established a precedent, as he has adopted a new scheme in writing stories. Realizing that in order to produce a successful moving picture it is necessary to visualize, Mr. Chester has written his action out first, and then supplanted the word version in his story. Mrs. Lillian Chester collaborates with her husband in all his works, and she is partly responsible for the success of "Cordelia Blossom," "The Ball of Fire," and "The Enemy," which was Mr. Chester's greatest work prior to "Runaway June." Owing to the great popularity of Chester's stories, over 2,500 newspapers have been signed to run this story in serial form.

Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester.

The A. P. Robyn Newspaper Syndicate of Chicago has been retained to syndicate this story in the various newspapers, and several novel and interesting advertising plans have been developed along this line. Mr. Chester's theme is novel and unique in many ways, and treats with a subject which is world-wide and of interest to everyone, inasmuch as it deals entirely with a present-day problem of life. In talking with Mr. Chester, he said: "In writing 'Runaway June,' Mrs. Chester and I have laid out the following plan: We first of all take our main plot and determine upon the lines to pursue. This has taken up considerable time, and after we have thoroughly established the thread of continuity, we then take up the question of sub-plots. After that an action plot is written out, entirely devoid of the dialogue. When we have this action plot so that it suits us, we then re-write the whole thing and place our dialogue where it suitably belongs. The counter-plots in 'Runaway June,' as I have outlined them, are unique in many ways, and there is a mystery which runs through the entire story, and will not be disclosed until the fifteenth instalment. I have tried to adhere to the truth as much as possible, and the theme I have utilized is one that I have had in mind for years."

"The Mystery of the Seven Chests"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

ROMANTIC and mysterious! Those two words describe the quality of the two-reel release of the Selig Polyscope Company on December 7, entitled "The Mystery of the Seven Chests." Plays of the first class have always been popular on the screen, but mystery plays are not generally so. In this production, however, the audience is kept in doubt as to what the object of the leading character is, until the last few scenes, but never once does sense of the story become obscure on that account.

There is plenty of action throughout, this gaining a nicely balanced proportion with the plot. The construction is peculiar to the screen. Several plot elements are introduced and then apparently left unsolved; another incident taking the foreground. Slowly and artistically, however, toward the close of the second reel, all threads are drawn together and at the close every point is made clear, so that even the person who only casually observes is not left in doubt.

James Oliver Curwood is the author of the scenario and E. A. Martin produced it. The leading roles of Belmont, a society favorite, and Rose, the girl, are in the hands of Edwin Wallock and Adda Gleason. C. C. Holland, Lillian Hayward, William Stowell and William Hutchinson appear in the supporting parts. All do what is required of them in a praiseworthy manner but in this production the story holds one's interest so strongly that actors and actresses are forgotten and all one's interest is centered upon the final outcome of the story.

The photography is clear and the details, as a whole, are well handled. Some unique camera effects are secured in the scenes portraying a storm on the sea coast. The settings are adequate.

The initial scenes of the story show Jack Lawless, a mysterious man with a past, leaving seven chests in a storage vault. Just as he leaves the place he meets with an accident and is taken to a hospital. When he is told that he cannot live he writes a note and requests that it be delivered at once. Through the carelessness of a doctor it becomes lost. Fifteen years later the letter is found and mailed.

Cleo, Lawless' sister, receives the letter and reads it in a public place. Rose, the daughter of a convict who is serving a life term for murder, looks over her shoulder and is startled by what she sees. Belmont, a society favorite, is persuaded by his friends to buy the seven chests, which are being auctioned to pay for their storage. He thinks it would be a novelty to open them at a house party he is planning.

Cleo and her husband try to secure the chests but arrive just after Belmont has purchased them. They try to secure them from him but he refuses to sell them. Rose also tries to secure the boxes but she, too, finds that they have been secured by Belmont. The society leader places them on his yacht and takes them to his summer home some miles up the lake. Cleo's husband secures a band of ruffians and follows in another yacht. Rose starts for Belmont's summer home in an automobile but when she is six miles from her destination she is told that she will have to walk the rest of the way as the auto can go no further.

A storm comes up, during which Rose reaches Belmont's home. She is taken in and when she tells the chests. Belmont and the sailors from his yacht follow them and a battle takes place on the beach, resulting in the surrender of the thieves and the safe return of the chests.

With feverish anxiety Rose opens one chest after another while Belmont looks on admiringly, for he has learned to love her. Finally the girl gives a cry of joy and holds up a paper. Belmont is astonished, for he thought she sought the fortune that they also find in the chests, but she explains to him that it is the confession of the murderer for whose crime her father was sent to prison. She also tells Belmont that Cleo was the murderer's sister and that her object in securing the chests was to get the gold that they contained. Belmont then tells Rose of his love and is made happy when she agrees to become his wife.

Colored Players Featured

H. S. Moss of the Historical Feature Film Company, 105 West Monroe street, Chicago, on Tuesday, November 17, exhibited at Fulton's exhibition room to members of the trade press and a few interested exhibitors a two-reel comedy of the Black and White brand, in which all the players are negroes. The picture was entitled "Aladdin Jones" and depends for its comedy upon the Aladdin-like dream which an old colored man had one afternoon. The photography is fair and the action reasonably fast. Mr. Moss has just returned from an eastern and southern tour during which he called upon numerous exchange men with regard to handling the Black and White films.

Lubin Lead a Southern Girl

The old South, with all its gracious charm and delightful chivalry, has a worthy representative on the great staff of Lubin players, in the person of Miss Velma Whitman. Very much of a southern girl is this popular player, for her full name is Velma Virginia Whitman. She was born in the grand old city of Richmond, Va., and like so many of the players who have made film productions notable, Miss Whitman had a thorough course of training in the legitimate before taking up the silent drama. For some time, Miss Whitman was associated with Corse Peyton in stock. Her admirable work under the direction of this noted producer of the legitimate attracted the attention of Henry Miller, distinguished playwright and actor. As a result, Mr. Miller featured Miss Whitman for a season as the lead in that notable play, "The Servant in the House." Miss Whitman has been engaged in moving picture work for about a year. During that entire time, she has been at the head of one of the companies at the Lubin western branch, in Los Angeles, California.

Essanay's Story of Court Intrigue

Reviewed by Neil C. Caward

FOR its release of Friday, December 11, the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company offers a two-reel feature subject entitled "Every Inch a King" in which is pictured a story dealing with the romantic scenes of court life in two small European principalities, with all their intrigue of love, hate and strife.

Naturally the picture is superbly costumed and filmed against backgrounds of royal magnificence. Francis X. Bushman, the popular Essanay star, is seen as King Leofric of Vidonia, while Lester Cuneo appears as King Livian, Leofric's rival. Beverley Bayne appears as Elba Allen, an American girl beloved by King Leofric, and Bryant Washburn, the Essanay heavy, assumes the role of Kevan, a court spy. The photography is fully up to the Essanay standard, and the lighting effects are, as usual, worthy of particular praise.

The marriage of King Leofric.

As the story unfolds, we learn that King Livian is determined to crush the neighboring king, Leofric, and to seize the kingdom of Vidonia. King Livian is awed by the larger European powers, who are always opposed to conflicts among the smaller kingdoms, and King Leofric is much opposed to war, because of the hardships his people will have to endure, so, when Livian suggests that if King Leofric will marry his neice, Princess Irmingarde, he will refrain from war, Leofric readily agrees, although his heart is really already given to Elba Allen, a beautiful American heiress, whom he has chanced to meet.

The king meets Elba Allen, the American girl.

Irmingarde, as queen, plots with King Livian. She conspires with Kevan, a spy of Livian's, in Leofric's court to demand, when the time is ripe, half of the kingdom in her own right.

Believing the auspicious moment has arrived, she sends a note, telling Livian of her determination and suggesting that he prepare to strike immediately. Leofric, until then totally unsuspicious, intercepts the note and immediately accuses the queen of treachery. As a result of his suspicions, he divorces her, under an ancient law.

In the meantime Elba Allen has disappeared, and one learns that the queen, jealous of her beauty, has sent her a poisoned fan with a note saying that it was a present from the king. Using the fan, Elba is overcome by the poisonous fumes, and while unconscious is thrown into a dungeon.

The American correspondent faces King Leofric.

Walton, an American newspaper correspondent and an intimate friend of Elba Allen's, chances to discover the fan and the note, and jumps to the conclusion that the king is responsible for Elba's disappearance. When he boldly makes his accusation, the king shows him the letter is in the hand writing of the queen. Soon afterwards the queen is led away to the dungeon, where Elba is discovered by the guards and is released.

King Leofric leaves for the frontier in answer to a letter from King Livian, who sends him an ultimatum, after he learns from Kevan, the spy, of the frustration of the plot. King Leofric and his army are attacked by Livian's men and they fight valiantly, until joined by a force of U. S. marines, who have been summoned by Walton upon the discovery that Elba, the American girl, is missing. Aided by the U. S. marines, King Leofric's forces are able to quickly defeat King Livian and his troops. Elba, meanwhile, upon being released from the dungeon, immediately asks for her royal lover, the king, and is told that he has gone to the front there to defend Vidonia against invasion by the troops of King Livian. Elba immediately mounts a horse and rushes to the frontier to be with the king. She arrives just as Livian and his army are repulsed, and is hailed by the troops as the new queen.

Tyrone Power in "Aristocracy"

Were Tyrone Power to have a play written especially for him his role could not match his virile type and forceful personality better than does the character of Jefferson Stockton, the unpretentious millionaire in Bronson Howard's renowned play, "Aristocracy," lately filmed in four reels by the Famous Players Film Company.

As is usual with this company the atmosphere inspired by the interior settings and exterior locations, whether they be in this country or elsewhere, is the last word in completeness. The photography is flawless, and the acting is as nearly so as Tyrone Power, Arthur Hoops, Marguerite Skirvin, Edna Mayo, Ida Waterman, and William Rosell can make it, and their efforts have not been wasted. The story is of a romance between the youngest members of two strongly contrasted families. The Stocktons of the West are enormously wealthy, and really care nothing for the rigid conventionalities of society, but attempt to break through its barrier because they feel that their success entitles them to a place on the recognized list of people who have accomplished things.

The Lawrences of New York are the proud occupants of a place on this same list by virtue of their ancestors, and wax indignant when they learn that their son, Stuyvesant, has become engaged to Virginia Stockton. Their stubborn persecution of the romance leads to developments which end in one man's death, and the near-shattering of the Stockton home. In the wake of this follows the parents' forgiveness, and a happy re-union between the sweethearts.

Visiting the Horsley Menagerie

"Where," we demanded for the fifth time of Chester Beecroft, "do you suppose they are?"

"That's what I'd like to know," Mr. Beecroft informed us, and a roar at our very side told us that they were right there.

The "they" were the Bostock trained animals which David Horsley had purchased at a price said to exceed $100,000 and they—the animals, not the dollars—had just come into Dock 58 of the North river in the hold of the good ship Minnewaska. The press-party, headed by Chester Beecroft, Mr. Horsley's manager of publicity, groped down into the hold by way of a steep iron stairway and a stout rope to hold to, stepped warily along a narrow dim passageway in quest of the animals and in the hope that when found they would be well caged. Then happened the roar.

The dim light showed a cage in which a lion tried to pace and found the space too small. Then we made out a whole row of cages and, becoming accustomed to the semi-darkness, found leopards and cubs and lionesses; bears; Apollo, said to be the handsomest lion in the world, and who is to be starred in pictures with the same degree of publicity as though he were a human star. There were elephants chained in the center of the hold, and their existence was first made known to us by a large black trunk which invited peanuts. The elephants passed in safety, we came to the dancing bears; great white ones. One, more generous than his fellows, gave an exhibition of steps that would have brought honor to a graduate of Castle House. The roller-skating bears would fain have performed also, at least so we interpreted the noises which came from their cage, but for lack of their skates, could not. Two lionesses passed and repassed each other in a cage ordinarily big enough for but one, and somewhere in the hold monkeys chattered and a wild cat shrilled for attention. Two foreign looking dogs, dignified and unafraid, were chained to boxes of something and a polar bear padded about in a cage larger than the others.

"Well," said somebody, when the half-lighted parts of the hold had been investigated and the darker ones left in peace, "I guess we've seen everything." And just then the trainers, having stood by their baggage until the custom officials had acquainted themselves with the contents, entered and ran along beside the cages calling to their pets in words soft and soothing. In a moment the hold was echoing animal expressions of joy, while caressing hands were extended through the bars and the occupants of the cages endearingly addressed as "My ba-bee!"

Harry Tudor, for twelve years personal representative of Mr. Bostock, was busy making out a list of names for which passage was being reserved out to the coast, where the Horsley animals are to be provided with spacious quarters. Mr. Tudor discovered that not only had the trainers answered the call to the war-free states but had brought their families with them, so they joyously informed him.

And by this time the Horsley menagerie of trained animals, sixty-nine of them, are at the Horsley plant in California.

Made Official Cinematographers

It has been officially announced that Pathe Freres have been appointed official cinematographers to the French government in connection with the war. This much sought for concession will give Pathe a tremendous advantage in the matter of securing authentic and historically valuable pictures of the world's greatest conflict, since it is evident that the prejudice which has existed against the motion picture camera anywhere near the firing line will, to some degree, be lessened when the cameraman bears an official government commission.

In this connection, Pathe Freres announce that the reported arrangement between a branch of theirs in Germany and the German government for the taking of war pictures with official sanction, is untrue. Such an arrangement they say may have been made with a German film company, but certainly not with any connection of theirs.

Universal's New Lighting Effect

Weird Results Expected

WHEN news came from the Universal company that the Imp aggregation was going to "pull a new one" over at Edgewater Heights, N. J., on Wednesday night, November 18, it aroused only a vision of some hitherto untried technical trick in lighting and photography, and a desire to be on the grounds. But it did not prepare one for the revelation seen upon arriving at "the house of fear," located at the end of a twenty-minute auto ride up a steep and lonely hill.

"The House of Fear" is the title of a multiple reel picture nearing completion under the guidance of Stuart Paton, its author and director. And when that picture is completed it will offer a phase of night-lighting never before seen in pictures, if Paton's ideas and Cameraman Eugene Gaudio's treatment of them bear fruit. The idea of the play is that a man and his son try to obtain possession of a relative's fortune by scaring her to death, an easy thing in view of the doctor's report that the least shock might prove too much for her weakened heart. To facilitate matters they take her to "the house of fear."

In the production of the picture this proves to be a roomy-looking, veranda-surrounded house, the two front rooms of which the energetic and diplomatic assistant-director obtained permission to strip of all furnishings, which are substituted by ten of the handiest and most serviceable lights for their size in motion picture use. They are the product of Allison and Hadaway of 235 Fifth avenue, New York, and are known as the panchromatic twin arcs. They shed a clear, even light that enables the film to register the differences between shades and colors. In explaining the merits of his invention Mr. Allison said: "Why should your face register the same color as your shirt, as it does in the average picture? They're not the same color." His audience then and there surrendered, and admitted that these little nineteen pound, portable lights with their suit-case-like carriers were in a class all by themselves.

One of these lights, which, by the way, tumbled out of the auto and rolled down part of the twenty-minute hill before being retrieved, was stationed in a tree overlooking the veranda where it could light up the front door. Camera, lights, make-up, and all other things being ready, action commenced, and Frances Nelson, Hobart Henley, Howard Crampton, Wallace Scott, Allen Holubar, and four policemen, made numerous trips in and out of the house, and were still busy at it when an auto transported eight of the spectators down the hill to a chicken supper at the hotel-restaurant-saloon-poolroom wherein gather the town's free-lance orators of an evening. Paul Gulick and Robert S. Doman were hosts to the press and words were an unnecessary tribute of appreciation.

One of the startling effects obtained by Universal's new night photography.

Julius Stern, manager of the Imp studio, was in charge of the experiment, the results of which it is hoped will show the windows of "the house of fear" lit up against an ink-black background, with the characters silhouetted against the light when they pass the door or windows. Mr. Stern was one of the party who clung to the post of duty until dispersed by the approach of dawn.

If earnest effort linked with experienced handling and hopes can influence the gods of Fate in the Universal's favor these midnight scenes should interpret a weirdness which can be found in no other picture than "The House of Fear."

"Neptune's Daughter" Captures Canada

"Neptune's Daughter," the big Universal feature, has captured Canada. Opening last week at the Princess, Toronto, for one week, the business has been so satisfactory that the second week was immediately booked, and is continuing with increased receipts.

In Montreal the same film was presented Monday, at His Majesty's theater and business was so good that the second week was booked. In Ottawa at the Russel theater the governor-general, the Dominion household and members of Parliament, which is now in session, attended the opening performance. The business is excellent.

The municipal authorities in New Orleans have afforded the Life Photo Film Corporation the use of all the public parks in making "Springtime."

All Star's "The Education of Mr. Pipp"

the hen-pecked Pipp, he gives a demonstration of the down-trodden variety of husband that is highly amusing. The film is the picturization of Augustus Thomas' play which was founded upon the Pipp series of drawings by Charles Dana Gibson. There are realistic ship scenes, pretty exteriors, an effective glimpse of a Pittsburg steel foundry; there is an interesting farcical plot and there is a Mrs. Pipp whose tyranny is the lever effective in propelling the unfortunate Pipp toward a fortunate education. The two tall and sympathetic daughters of the Pipp alliance figure importantly in the production, though the moments of most interest are those in which Mr. Pipp remains on the screen. The Pipp secretary, John Willing, the three counts-of-no-account, Lord Herbert Fitzmaurise, his mother Lady Viola, the prefect of the police and the detective complete the cast which aids in Mr. Pipp's education.

Pittsburgh is the home of the Pipp family. The supposed head-of-the-house sells his steel mills and is taken in tow by his family—an ambitious wife and two grown daughters—to New York where they take a Fifth avenue residence and prepare to break into society. John Willing, Mr. Pipp's secretary, accompanies them; he is in love with Ida Pipp and when Julia Pipp meets her riding-master Mr. Fitzgerald, it is a case of love at first sight.

Then the count, the duke and the baron enter into the story. The count instructs the girls in French and on the Pipps' sudden resolve to "do" Europe, he receives a check for $75 in payment. The baron raises the check to $75,000 and when the Pipps have sailed, accompanied by the count, the duke dons his silk hat and suave manners and succeeds in securing Willing's endorsement and the sum of $75,000. Then he and the baron leave for Paris where they wire the count to join them. The purchase of a diamond tiara by the Pipps decides the count, and the three succeed in obtaining the tiara. Meanwhile Willing and Fitzgerald have cabled Mr. Pipp and the latter's answer causes them to seek a Pinkerton man and follow the trio of nobility to Europe. There are many comedy incidents which occur at the castle of Lady Viola. The social ambitions of Mrs. Pipp undergo many ups and downs, with the final result that each of her daughters secures the man of her desire and Mrs.

Pathe's Story of Court Life

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

FOR superb photography, natural coloring, and magnificent big scenes Pathe's "More Than Queen" can well be classed as one of the most attractive four-reel features in the market today. In addition to this it has a splendid cast, among whom are four of the foremost stars of France, and a story that is much above the average both for its general air of refinement, and its intensely human interest.

Although the characters are of royal blood and position, and the backgrounds luxuriously furnished rooms in the palace, the picture can not rightly be classed as "high-brow," because the people are presented here just as plain, ordinary human beings subject to the same weaknesses, mean traits, sorrow, and misfortune that one would expect to find among the peasantry. In presenting crowned and titled heads in this light, the story becomes a strongly appealing drama which differs from others only in having a royal setting.

A powerful climax is set off by a fire scene that is so far above the usual scene of this kind that there can be no comparison. The film cuts from close-up to distant views and back again, disclosing scenes of the blazing summer castle, and of the frenzied guests running back and forth and in and out of the flaming building. The resultant stirring effect is caused greatly by the vivid manner in which the scenes are photographed and colored, and the way in which the cut backs are made.

The acting is fully up to the high standard set by the magnificent settings and artistic lighting effects, and completes the qualifications necessary to make the picture one of appeal to a mixed audience. Gabrielle Robinne, star of the Comedie Francaise, is seen in the leading feminine role, as the queen, and Rene Alexander, also of the Comedie Francaise, plays the male lead opposite her, as Lieutenant Bernard. M. Signor and Mlle. Leontine Massart impersonate the "heavy" characters, the grand duke and duchess who make the poor queen's life a burden to her by their petty persecutions.

Fearing that the young, handsome Lieutenant Bernard will prove a serious obstacle in their path, in realizing their ambitions for the widowed Queen Maria's throne, the Grand Duke and Duchess Marony secure his appointment to Paris as Norovian military attache. The queen recalls the order, and commands that the officers of the guard choose one of their own number to fill the post. In spite of this, Bernard receives instructions from his superior to report at Paris.

The insistence used in disposing of him arouses his suspicions, and he notifies the queen of his second order to proceed to Paris, which, of course, she cancels. The duchess, who is really behind the plot, then tries jealousy as a means of breaking the queen's confidence in the lieutenant, and is almost successful. At a fete planned to celebrate the opening of the summer palace Bernard receives a note signed in the queen's name, requesting him to meet her at the pool in the courtyard.

the courtyard with her back turned to the entrance, and Bernard, entering, thinks her Maria. As he kneels at the woman's side, making love to her, one of the court ladies brings in the queen. Bernard attempts to explain, but she cuts him short and leaves, heartsore at what she thinks is his faithlessness.

Later in the evening, through the carelessness of one of the servants, the palace catches fire, and Bernard, at great risk to his life, rescues the queen, and her little boy. For a time the queen is consumed by her admiration and love for this brave man, and yields to him, but, as their lips meet, her conscience exerts itself and chides her for thus forgetting her son's right to the throne. She determines to sacrifice love for duty, and Bernard aids her in her resolution to save the throne for her son by leaving the country.

A short time later the boy receives a fatal fall from his horse. All the purpose now taken out of her desire to hold the throne, Queen Maria abdicates in favor of Grand Duke Marony. She then writes Bernard, asking if he will accept the life and love of one who was formerly a queen, but is now only a plain woman. His answer and the manner in which he greets her prove that his love was for the woman alone.

Strong Alliance Release

A new and strong release on the Alliance program is the Excelsior four-part picture, "When Fate Leads Trump." Alice M. Roberts' book, from which the story was taken, can boast of no more interesting telling than is given in the film version, which was made in that beautiful country of the Saranac by the Excelsior people. Harry Handworth directed the picture and Octavia Handworth, Gordon DeMaine, William A. Williams and Tom Tempest are strong in their respective big roles. The story appeals particularly because of its nature settings; there are wonderful waterfalls and woods and squatty log cabins set down in a meager piece of cleared woods, and there are the lumbermen busy at their tasks. Civilization is given ample representation in the home of Marian Williams (Octavia Handworth) and the vacation-time hotel, which is accessory to golf links and trout streams. Then comes Gordon (Gordon DeMaine) son of a chief of smugglers. He promptly falls in love with Marian, though warned by his companion (W. A. Williams), that, as next in line for the chieftanship of the smugglers, he should not marry. He does not heed this advice, however, and Marian becomes his wife. Two years later he receives word that his father is dying. Telling his wife of his father's calling, he decides to take his wife and child to his father's bedside. When they arrive they find the father well and in revenge the chief (Harry Handworth) takes the child and separates husband and wife. Later, in a raid by the police, Gordon is captured and sent to prison, and Marian escapes into the woods. She comes upon a lumber camp finally, but has lost her memory owing to privations. She is given a home in the camp and some time later marries Jim, the paymaster (Tom Tempest). No return of her memory occurs and the arrival of a son brings no recollection of her other child, now lost to her forever.

But one day a stranger comes to the camp. He recognizes Jim's wife as Marian, his own wife, and the latter's memory begins to awake. Jim demands an explanation of Gordon as to his former knowledge of his (Jim's) wife, and when Gordon refuses he and Jim fight a pistol duel. Gordon is doomed, as he had loaded his revolver with blanks, and, before dying, tells Jim that Marian used to be his wife and that his death is the only honorable way. And so passed the life of a man.

The big action throughout the story is much better handled than are some of the details, but it should be pointed out that this is not all the fault of the director. However, they are so slight as to detract but slightly from the general excellence of the film, which is one that can be highly recommended. The National Board of Censors passed it without a cut.

Blanche Sweet Joins Lasky

Samuel Goldfish announces that a contract has finally been concluded between the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company and Miss Blanche Sweet, whereby the famous film favorite will appear in the new series of Lasky-Belasco productions now being staged for the screen. Miss Sweet was selected by Mr. Belasco and Cecil B. De Mille, for the Lasky-Belasco productions, after an exhaustive study of the characteristics and abilities of all the more widely known young women now appearing in photodramatic presentations. Miss Sweet is said to have signed a contract for a term of years at a record-breaking salary. Blanche Sweet needs no introduction to lovers of photoplays, for, though she is only eighteen years of age, she has been making history in this art for several seasons. Up to the present time, she has been mainly associated with David Griffith, in most of whose leading productions she has appeared. She worked under Mr. Griffith while he was directing for the Biograph Company and played the title role of "Judith of Bethulia," which electrified America last spring. More recently she has been working with Griffith for the Reliance and Majestic companies, and has played the leading feminine roles in "Home, Sweet Home," "The Avenging Conscience," "The Escape," and other film plays wihch have reached Broadway. Mr. Goldfish announces that Miss Sweet will make her first appearance as a Lasky-Belasco star in William C. De Mille's famous success, "The Woman," which played at the Republic theater for two seasons, and which will be ready for release on February 15. The production will be staged with the most elaborate care, and work will begin within a week.

New Kinetophote Stars

Edwin August.

Edwin August and Tom Terriss have joined forces with the Kinetophote. They have already begun to cast for the first of a series of photoplays taken from famous plays which each will produce and appear in for the Kinetophote. The arrangements between Mr. Terriss and Mr. August and the Kinetophote were made complete this week and each of these sterling screen players has established himself in the offices of the corporation, at 126-132 West Forty-sixth street. Mr. August has arranged to take up at once work on one of two popular novels, the rights of which have been bought by the Kinetophote. He will work with the author of the one selected as the first feature which he will produce, and will closely follow the original ideas regarding the characters. Each member of the cast will, therefore, be carefully selected as to looks and ability for the particular role which he is to play. Mr. Terriss will produce and star in the famous Terriss plays made noteworthy not only by his father, the great English actor, but by himself as well. The rise which Edwin August has had in pictures has been steady from the time when he played leads with Mary Pickford and Blanche Sweet in the old Biograph days. In addition to writing and producing, Mr. August has been the star in all of the screen dramas which have been made by him.

Tom Terriss.

Mr. Terriss has been well known to the American public for years, as well as to the English public. His work on the stage, especially in the characters from the works of Charles Dickens, has been highly praised.

THE STABILITY OF THE PROGRAM IDEA.

THE plan of the program maker is now being subjected to its first supreme test. Present indications prove the soundness of the idea that has prevailed since General Film Company was formed. Nearly every phase of the film business shows a demoralized condition—except the big program. General, Mutual and Universal, all three doubtless hard hit, evidence no outward signs of it. Their plan of program making and handling seems to be thoroughly practical. The years of experience; the several efficient organizations; the know-how of the whole proceeding from the scenario to the screen is proving advantageous, even though Europe would play the war game. How long the plan will be able to survive against a condition that eliminates several million of m. p. theater attendants must yet be determined. That the scheme holds strong against a tendency of the open market by lesser elements, which make up the balance of business, is everywhere in evidence. It was only a short time ago when the owners of a few negatives would puff out their chests and declare it easy to get twenty cents a foot if the stuff had the punch in it. There is nothing so pathetic as to witness this same person rushing around now with prints under his arm, offering them at any price above four cents a foot. The program plan is proving the best, so far. But a program must be all of a program, sufficiently flexible to meet all sorts of exhibtors' requirements. Thus far we have only three programs that do that. They have already been named. The program, so-called, that offers a subject now and then—one a week, or two a week, on the strength of every film being a so-called masterpiece, will have to devise some other plan if it succeeds for long. The program should be all sufficient and wholly satisfying within itself. There are very few places in this country that will not require more than one film a week. Because some few subjects have had the virility to hold a house for twenty weeks or more is no reason to suppose that a prospering manufacturing business will be established on an output of two-a-year. Exhibitors of films still require something like three or more reels, six or seven times a week.

SEGREGATION IN THE AUDIENCE.

ABOUT the time of the Salem witches, when any woman whose personal conduct was not to the liking of everybody was liable to be drowned in the nearest pond or burned at the stake, old New England was in the throes of a most remarkable code. No man might kiss his wife, sister or daughter except in the privacy of his own home, with the curtains drawn. The Blue Laws reigned supreme, even, as some poet said, to the Hanging of a cat on Monday,

For killing of a mouse on Sunday;

while segregation of the sexes was carried to the ultimate extreme.

But old New England had little on modern Chicago. Last summer, amid the laughter of the whole country and the satirical comment of all the newspapers, the Lincoln Park Board built a fence out into Lake Michigan to keep as far apart as possible the men and women who patronized its bathing beach. Having survived that ridicule, the city now proposes to divide its picture theaters into, not two, but three parts, to accommodate the men and women who are together and men and women who are apart. Only the children are to have the run of the house.

Without considering the anticipated effect of this arrangement on the moral atmosphere of the city, it is certainly an opportunity for the worldly education of the children. It is a self-evident fact, checked, proved and sealed by experience, that if bad men are ever good, it is in the presence of good women. The reverse may or may not be true; observers are silent on this point. But if there is any truth in Chief of Police Gleason's claim that women "parasites"—his word—frequent the picture shows, their conversation with each other, as well as that of the stag section of the house, would doubtless be highly diverting and instructive to the unsegregated children.

The segregation project, granting it sense for the sake of argument, would defeat its own purpose if it had any. But as the proposal is wholly without form and void, a thing of joking and ridicule, there is little to gain by hurling adjectives against it.

EMPLOYMENT EVILS

FOR AN employe responsible for the hiring of other employes to charge men and women a percentage of their wages for the privilege of working is a contemptible form of graft. To extend the iniquitous scheme so that it operates to prevent these men and women from getting work at all unless they "come across" with the percentage payment is worse. Of course, it is no more perfidious when actors and actresses are its victims than in any other field of employment; but members of the profession are so accustomed to the legitimate payment of commissions to agents that they are less likely to protest an illegitimate levy when they encounter it. That makes it easier for the parasites to prey upon them with impunity.

There is mighty little of this kind of practice in the motion picture business; but there is some. It is very easy for a director to demand from five to twenty per cent of an actor's daily wage, and almost as easy for him to get it. The business has grown so big that, like the world, it takes all kinds of people to make it. Among the thousands some are bound to be unscrupulous.

The responsible heads of reputable producing companies will always be carefully kept in ignorance of such conditions, of course. It is up to the victimized actor to carry his case to these heads. That would effectually extinguish the dishonest director and help the protestant's friends as well as himself. And if the appeal fails, there are always the courts.

The trouble is that sometimes the job seems worth its cost in money and self-respect, and the victim keeps on being mulcted of a portion of his rightful income because it is the easiest course. But if anywhere on the frontier of the industry such a condition exists, only the oppressed actor himself can end it, and it is his duty to take action even at the risk of temporary loss of employment.

A COMPLIMENT FROM CENSORS

The National Board of Censorship, after reviewing the five reels of the new Excelsior release, "When Fate Leads Trump," from the book of John B. Hymer, made the curt remark, "Nothing to cut." "That is the way we like to have things," said William H. Wright. "We ourselves carefully consider every detail of a story before we actually produce it, and do not submit it for approval until we are certain that it warrants that approval."

Just A Moment Please

"Folks don't want topical pictures!" "It can't be done!" "I wouldn't give you a nickel a reel for war film!" and all the rest of that sort of "bunk" which was spilled when the Tribune's war film was first announced, is now in cold storage. Aaron Jones is still counting the jitneys the pictures have already brought in and the Studebaker attendance records have been smashed so high that nobody ever will find 'em again. But pshaw there's a lot of folks won't believe it yet.

Speaking of war, that Alco receivership reminds us of that old one that used to go "He walked right in and turned around—" but you know the rest of it, so why make the linotype artist set it.

EXTRA! EXTRA! EXTRA!

Bennie, the office-boy of the Nat'l Waterproof Film Co., has busted loose again with some of his own peculiar verse and we've enough on hand now to last over Thanksgiving and more is promised. While wandering through the cemetery just across the way Bennie alleges he found these epitaphs:

"Here rests in peace our little Joe,
Who got a cold at a picture show.
The film was 'rainy,' his feet got wet,
Or else Joe would be living yet."

"Beneath this sepulchre of rock
Lies Billy Goat. (Once owned by Mock.)
No more he'll butt, no more he'll smell,
The goat is dead, and gone to—Heaven."

Probably that's all you can stand at one installment. But beware, there's more to come.

Say, Lloyd, honest, you're a bum Macbeth to be pulling that "Lay on" stuff. It would be a crime to open up our files and reveal your past as exposed in your own sweet scented "billy doos," so we'll swallow your last insult in silence and trust that, when perfectly sober again, you will appreciate our consideration for your feelings. (Footnote:—This delicate reference to your possible inebriety is occasioned by your casual reference to the "hold enough" stuff.)

If the above doesn't completely obliterate you, permit us to congratulate the sheet which does you the honor of paying you a salary, upon its falling into line and printing stock reports, a la Motography. Your suggestion, old top? More congrats. Many of 'em.

RAH, RAH, RAH, RAH!

All the way from fair New Haven comes a postcard from our friends and fellow scribblers, Charley and Mabel, advising us that it was a great game, though "our team lost." Gosh, how we should have enjoyed seeing it, but somebody's gotto work, and this time it happened to be us.

Scenic Beauties in American Feature

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

EXTERIORS of wondrous beauty and interiors of stunning magnificence, together with capable acting and an interesting story, make American's two-reel feature release of Monday, November 30, entitled "The Beggar Child" a delightful offering for any exhibitor's program.

The story is laid in a foreign country and the vast variety of scenery for which California is famous, enables the American director to select a location that is convincing in every way—in fact one is almost tempted to believe the exteriors were taken in sunny Italy or along the coast of Spain, if we did not know that the American Company is located in Santa Barbara, and all its pictures are photographed in that vicinity.

Lycia finds something familiar in the new butler.

Ed Coxen has a suitable role in that of Hugo, a poor artist, and Winnifred Greenwood makes a charming Lycia, while George Field is seen as Count Roberto, and Charlotte Burton as Rosa, the count's servant. The minor roles of Marco and Dan Street, the American art student, are in the hands of John Steppling and King Clark.

Hugo, a painter of small means but great talent, is discovered, as the picture opens, well nigh distracted over the loss of his model, a child whose services he is unable longer to pay for, and whose mother refuses to let her pose until remuneration of some sort is forthcoming.

In another part of the city, Marco, a poor peasant is left a widower, with a small daughter to care for, and being short of funds takes his child to the vicinity of the cathedral where he leaves her, in the hope that some good Samaritan will find and adopt her.

Hugo, passing the cathedral a short time afterward, discovers the little girl, and learning that she is without a home, offers to care for and feed her, if she will take the place of his missing model. With the child as a subject, Hugo is inspired to paint a really wonderful picture, which he calls "The Beggar Child," and which brings him both fame and wealth, and leads to his adopting the little girl, whom he names Lycia.

Eighteen years later, Lycia, now a beautiful young woman, is courted by Count Roberto, a wealthy occupant of a neighboring chateau. Lycia looks with favor upon the count, until one day she is rescued from drowning by Dan Street, a young American art student, who sees her plight and goes to her assistance.

As a result of this meeting and a later one with Rosa, the peasant girl whom Count Roberto has betrayed, and who meets Lycia and tells her her story, the count is dismissed as Lycia's suitor by Hugo. Angered at being turned from Hugo's home, the count plans to win Lycia by unfair means and to that end plans with Marco, the butler in Hugo's household, and the real father of Lycia though he does not recognize his child, to kidnap the girl. Rosa's brother, seeking revenge for the wrong done his sister, enters Count Roberto's service, discovers the plot to kidnap Lycia, and at the critical moment substitutes Rosa for Hugo's daughter.

When the veiled lady is taken to the count's house, where the priest is waiting to perform the marriage ceremony, the count suspects no treachery, and goes ahead with the service, only to discover when it is too late that he has married the woman he wronged, instead of Lycia the girl he adores.

The caunt, unknawingly, marries his servant.

Lycia is rescued fram drowning.

When Dan asks Hugo for Lycia, the artist is told her life's story, and Marco, the butler, listening in the background, learns for the first time that the girl is his daughter, deserted eighteen years before on the cathedral steps. Marco reveals himself to Hugo, but the latter advises him not to let Lycia know, and the girl finds happiness in Dan's love.

"The Price He Paid"

Ella Wheeler Wilcox's poem, "The Price He Paid," was recently scenarioized by Louis Reeves Harrison and filmed by the Humanology Film Company, which has Jack Rose at its head. It is now being released by Warners' Features as a feature picture in five reels.

Its story is interesting, its actors play their parts well and the setting and photography are somewhat above the average. The story, however, does not visualize the type of man whom Mrs. Wilcox had in mind when she wrote her poetic arraignment of him who blights the life of her whom he has promised to love and protect as long as life shall last. The man of the poem heeded not the warning of elder people and saw life; much life. Then he met the girl. He made of himself a new man and he married her. But he made of her an invalid and his child a crippled thing; too feeble, even, to breathe. That man suffered because of his great and repentant love for his wife. He paid the price. But in the film the man is a different type. He has a fond young wife, but he gives his love to another; to a young girl of good family and position and they become engaged. The man deserts his wife. A message to him and to his fiancee bring them together in a doctor's house where a dead baby is the man's accuser. His fiancee renounces him with loathing, his wife is at the point of death, and the man becomes insane and is placed in an asylum. That is the price he pays.

Different stories, but the film of "The Price He Paid" is one of interest and undoubtedly of a great moral, nevertheless. M. C.

Two New Publications

Announcement is made that the Paramount Pictures Corporation is soon to issue a weekly magazine of general interest to the picture-going public, with a nation-wide circulation, to be called the Paramount Weekly. P. W. Hansl, formerly of the Delineator, is to be its editor, and the first issue is to be dated December 21. This weekly is said to be in no sense intended as a house organ, although articles by Paramount celebrities and scenes from Paramount releases will naturally be featured throughout the periodical.

The other publication is to be called Paramount Progress and will contain notes, stories and pictures of Paramount releases, departments dealing with various problems of the exhibitor and matter of that nature. The editor's name has not been announced, but he is said to be an individual with a wide knowledge of the motion picture business.

Operators' Ball

On Wednesday evening, December 9, the annual ball of the Chicago Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local, Number 2, will be held at the Coliseum Annex. The ball has become an affair of note and motion picture celebrities galore are expected to be present during the evening.

Yale-Harvard Film Attracts

It was a great little game, and Jack Eaton, of the Colonial Motion Picture Company, was on the side lines in charge of the five cameras which lost not a move of either the blue or crimson teams. Yale's energetic cheer leader—there were five, but the one in question was the cheeriest—was filmed in all his enthusiastic abandon, and Coolidge's ninety-four yard run, Ainsworth's twenty-eight yard gain, LeGore's punt, Knowles' struggles through center and Brickley's kick—these and all the other plays which made up the game, together with the snake dance of triumph, were faithfully filmed by the various camera men. All week the filmed version of the game shared honors with the headliner at the New York Palace theater.

Warning

Watterson R. Rothacker, general manager of the Industrial Moving Picture Company of Chicago, has learned that his company is being victimized and asks that a warning be issued to exhibitors throughout the country. His letter reads as follows:

S. R. Ware, manager of the Dixie theater, Sparta, Tennessee, has notified us that a Mr. F. M. Tisdale is traveling through Tennessee taking local moving pictures and using the name of the Industrial Moving Picture Company. F. M. Tisdale is not now and never has been connected with this company, and is using our name without authority. We will appreciate the courtesy if you will make mention of this fact to the exhibitors through the columns of Motography, and we will also appreciate any information we can secure as to the whereabouts of Mr. Tisdale.

Scoop For Animated Weekly

The Animated Weekly camera man obtained very fine pictures of the Yale-Harvard football game at New Haven on Saturday, November 21, and in the evening of the same day prints of the Weekly were shipped to the exchanges throughout the country. Most of the exchanges received the prints by Monday and were running them in the theaters, showing the greatest football game in history and the largest crowd ever assembled to witness any kind of a sporting event.

New K. C. Booking Company

The K. C. Booking Co., Limited, has been formed and has opened offices in Montreal, Canada. The company will handle all of the Kinetophote features in Canada, including such big productions as "The Spirit of the Poppy," "The Span of Life," "The Coming Power," and others. "Markia, or, The Destruction of Carthage," the Ambrosio production which the Kinetophote owns, will also be booked through the Montreal company.

Unique Gift For Selznick

Lewis J. Selznick, president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, has been shown an exceptional honor by the vaudeville people who have figured in the making of the World Film program. The honor is the gift of a vacation to be spent by Mr. Selznick and his family in the actors' colony in the Bermuda Islands. All expenses of the trip will be footed by those who have made the presentation of this gift to Mr. Selznick and he is at liberty to make the gift a reality whenever he chooses to do so.

Motography's Gallery of Picture Players

WALLACE REID, a recent addition to the Majestic and Reliance forces, is the son of the well known dramatic author, Hal Reid. On leaving the military academy at Freehold, N. J., Reid took with him a few athletic records which none of his successors has thus far been able to wrest from him. Swimming is his favorite sport, and he is by no means an amateur at it, having won second prize in a three mile swim in which some of the best swimmers on the Pacific Coast were entered. Reid is an exceptionally prolific writer, magazines and newspapers having claimed most of his attention though he has written a number of powerful photoplays and stage dramas. He has, at different times, served in the capacities of cartoonist, vaudeville lead, surveyor, magazine editor, reporter, and hotel clerk and has appeared on the pay rolls of several film companies.

Wallace Reid.

NORMA PHILLIPS' first desire to enter the theatrical profession was aroused by seeing Sarah Bernhardt in "Camille" in Paris. She was first seen in musical comedy, and in "Come Over Here" she enjoyed a long stay at the London Opera House. In this country she played with Richard Carle in "Jumping Jupiter" and Blanche Ring in "The Wall Street Girl," and took prominent parts in several other noted stage successes until a year or more ago when she became associated with the Mutual-Reliance company. Miss Phillips has been seen to advantage in a number of program releases, but is best known in the character that she created, "Our Mutual Girl," in which role she has met many people of world renown. Miss Phillips was born at Cambridge, Maryland, in February, 1892, and received the greater part of her education at Mt. St. Agnes College.

Norma Phillips.

DOROTHY E. GISH spent a good bit of her time during the two years in which she has appeared in photoplays in unburdening herself of the name of being "Lillian Gish's little sister." Her greatest ambition has always been to become a good actress, and so well have her efforts rewarded her that her older sister will have to be careful to avoid becoming "Dorothy Gish's big sister." The graceful little blonde with the shell-pink complexion and deep blue eyes is just five feet two and one-half inches in height, weighs one hundred and nine pounds and has appeared in so many photoplays that she cannot begin to remember them all. Miss Gish's favorite is "Judith of Bethulia" in which she appeared and which David Griffith produced while with the Biograph company. When Mr. Griffith left the latter company to enter the Mutual ranks Miss Gish accompanied him.

Dorothy Gish.

ROBERT HARRON made his debut into motion pictures through the humble position of messenger boy at the Biograph studio in 1908. Since then he has become known as one of the best juvenile leads in the picture field. Harron was born and raised in New York and at the age of fourteen offered his exclusive services to the Biograph concern for three dollars a week. He was employed as errand boy, and often played a similar position in pictures during his leisure time. David Griffith, then director for the company, observed his natural dramatic powers and began training him to develop his talents. Under Mr. Griffith's able instruction Harron made wonderful strides, and was soon entrusted with important juvenile parts. He was one of the group that accompanied Mr. Griffith when he changed to the Mutual coast studio.

Brevities of the Business

One of the best of filmdom's press men changed companies during the past week, and what was Lasky's loss was Alco's gain. The man in question was Harry L. Reichenbach. One year ago he joined the Lasky forces. There is an interesting little story connected with this event which concerns the fact that for years Mr. Reichenbach's connection with the theatrical world and Mr. Lasky's likewise had made them rather bitter enemies. But when Mr. Lasky organized his film company there was one man he wanted for the important office of manager of publicity. That man was Harry L. Reichenbach. And so it was that the latter became publicity manager for the Lasky interests and served them faithfully and well. Offers from other firms, a number of them, found the desk of the sought-after Lasky publicity man. But there was but one answer. Then, four months ago, came an offer from the Alco Company at its formation. It was not considered. Two weeks ago Mr. Reichenbach wired his resignation to Mr. Lasky at the coast. Through no fault of Mr. Lasky's, his publicity man determined to browse in fields anew.

Within the following week the vanishing manager of the publicity desk considered several offers from big companies. And from them Mr. Reichenbach chose the Alco. Previous to his film work he had eleven years of fruitful results as representative of, as he himself puts it, "the best and worst shows in America." He brings to the position of press manager of the Alco Film Corporation unlimited energy and ability, and a personality that makes for a liking of both himself and whatever company he represents.

A man of many friends. That is Harry Reichenbach.

Catherine Carr, short-story writer and originator of scenarios, is the responsible person who holds the position of chief scenario editor with the Kinetophote Corporation. She has written since she was fourteen, and her success as a magazine writer has made her known in this profession; she has been writing scenarios for the last three years and takes her stories from everyday incidents and characters. Mrs. Carr is a southern woman. She was born in Austin, Texas, and raised on the Blythewood plantation, a family estate, in Louisiana. She was schooled in Washington, D. C., and before she was sixteen became the bride of W. Newton Sharpe, a Virginia man, member of the New York Stock Exchange and of New York clubs. Already the young southern girl had a number of published short stories to her credit but it was as the wife of her second husband, John Gillis Carr, that she attained a wider popularity both as a writer and as a Washington society woman.

Following the death of her second husband, Mrs. Carr adopted writing as a profession and, as the livelihood of herself and children depended upon her success in this work, she gave it her best thought and attention, with satisfying results. Three years ago Mrs. Carr wrote her first photoplay. She sent it to the Vitagraph Company and it was accepted, with the request that she submit to that company whatever other scenarios she might write. "I aimed to be original in my subjects," commented Mrs. Carr in explanation of her success. "I made my stories depend on some other emotion than just love. Since my plots were all accepted, I guess I may claim to have been successful with them. Anyway, the Vitagraph offered me a permanent position with them and I accepted. There I specialized on writing to fit individual characters. Then came the offer last January to assume the editorship of the Kinetophote Corporation, which was then in the process of forming. It was a splendid offer, and I came."

John Wild has a favorable following among those who call upon him in the offices of the Hepworth-American Film Company, where he serves well as publicity and advertising manager. His connection with the film industry dates back to Glasgow, Scotland, and the year 1902. Two years later he associated himself with the B. B. pictures in London and two years ago came to New York with the New Century pictures. Then he served with the Eclair company and next with the Gaumont company, which had jurisdiction over the American-Kineto Corporation, with which Mr. Wild was identified. His next allegiance was to the company which he now represents and of which C. Parfray is president and W. Arthur, treasurer. Mr Wild is manager of sales, publicity and advertising and in this three-fold assignment, is giving entire satisfaction. His interest in his work is large and he has the reputation of being an exhaustive worker and well-liked by his associates.

"Zudora" made its bow to the public on Monday, November 23 and was enthusiastically received. Bookings on November 21 were in excess of $500,000—which is $150,000 ahead of the bookings of the "Million Dollar Mystery" at its first release date. Stock has advanced under the influence of a remarkable opening and no common can now be had under 80. It is reported over 1,100 newspapers at the end of this week will be telling the story to their Sunday patrons.

World Film Corporation—There has been active trading in this stock at between 4½ and 5 on the New York curb for several weeks.

A Chicago company has been formed to exploit the Chicago Tribune's "Belgian War Pictures." It is understood the rights for the New England States were sold for $25.000.

That an evolution in the demand for investments is under way at the present time becomes every day more apparent. Bankers, lawyers, heads of bond houses, etc., who absolutely scorned the motion picture securities two years ago, are all eager to buy stock or be identified with motion picture companies either directly or indirectly. This augurs well for better business methods being put into force in this industry. It also means that the entire plane of the motion picture industry will be considerably advanced and that their securities will be regarded from a collateral standpoint, with better favor.

Being the "Third Party" in that little drama, "Crushed on the Alco Settee," or "Why Is a Riding-Habit?" you can see, Lloyd, that my hands are tied and my typewriter honor-bound to offer no suggestion as to the doubtful fate of the gentleman to the right. However, far be it from me to allow a good idea to go unchampioned, so I abet your suggestion as to floor space with an emphatic, if not lusty (I rooted for the losing team at New Haven!) "Hear! Hear!" Mr. D. of the "D. M." (this does not refer to a R. R.), please note. M. C.

Alex Lorimore has brought his pleasant personality back to the Times Square (New York) district to offices in the Longacre building, where he is in charge as president of Bishop, Pessers & Lorimore Inc., importers and exporters of motion picture films. Mr. Lorimore was formerly general sales manager for Gaumont, then served in the same capacity for the Box Office Attractions Company, after which he engaged in the manufacture of films with a downtown office and now is back among his many friends, in a new company which has himself as president and H. Pessers as vice-president. Sincere wishes of success are his from all who know him.

Hazel Dawn, one of the most charming and talented of the younger favorites of the American stage, who made her debut before the motion picture camera in the Famous Players' production of Bronson Howard's play, "One of Our Girls," has been re-engaged by that concern to star in a film version of the famous comedy-drama, "The Love Route."

In staging George Kleine's big feature, "Du Barry," unique and expensive water color sketches were made for each interior. These were painted by an Italian artist at considerable cost and rigidly followed by scenic artists and stage carpenters.

The Excelsior Feature Film Company, having just released "When Fate Leads Trump," announce that the next picture, at present called "The Shadows," from the book by John B. Hymer, will undergo a change of title. Exactly what the new title will be has not as yet been decided. One of the Broadway managers has already announced a play of this name, and to avoid any possibility of confusion, the Excelsior people decided to make this change.

Della Connor, identified with the Pathe forces as a leading woman until recently, is playing the part of Sadie Small in George Kleine's "Officer 666." Miss Connor's splendid work has caused her to be retained to play "Joan," in "Stop Thief."

Harry Handworth, the director of the Excelsior Feature Film Company, found time to run down to New York City from Lake Placid for a day or so last week.

Bertram Bracken, director of the six-reel Box-Office film. "St. Elmo," and scores of other feature films for the Balboa Amusement Producing Company of Long Beach, Calif., and who was Gaston Melies' director during his world-wide tour, has resumed work for the Balboa studios, following a vacation of two months.

Mary Ryan, one of the best known leading women in America, has been engaged by George Kleine to play the maid in "Stop Thief," the famous Cohan & Harris comedy which is to be filmed by the Kleine forces following the completion of "Officer 666. She is at present starring in "On Trial," the big hit now playing at the New Candler theater, New York.

Novel photoplay construction is shown in "The Man Who Could Not Lose," the last feature that has been released by the Favorite Players Film Company. Carlyle Blackwell takes the part of the author, as well as the hero, in the story which the author writes, and in the closing scenes is shown engaged to marry the actual heroine of his story.

"Officer 666," or his brother, was badly needed at the Kleine studio, 11 East Fourteenth street, New York City, one night last week when three men, none of them over twenty-two years of age, broke in. They were frightened away by the night watchman bfore any damage was done, except the smashing of a painted scene which one of the boys tripped over in making a hasty exit.

George Ade gives an excellent burlesque on learning how to make love by correspondence school or by the infallible letter writer in Essanay's "The Fable of the Bush League Lover Who Failed to Qualify."

Theodore Marston, the Vitagraph director, with Dorothy Kelly and James Morrison, went to Newport, Rhode Island, this week, to take scenes off the coast. They will employ the guards of the life saving station at that point to rescue Miss Kelly from a sinking vessel. The breeches-buoys will be used and a thrilling scene will be enacted in the surging sea.

In one of the scenes of Mutual's "The Clansman," where President Lincoln is assassinated by John Wilkes Booth, R. A. Walsh, who played the role of Booth, was compelled to go through the assassination scene thirty-six times before it was done to the satisfaction of Director D. W. Griffith.

Maurice Costello, during his trip around the world as director-star of a party of Vitagraphers, made many friends and is continually receiving testimonials of appreciation and friendship from numerous foreign countries. Not long since he was the recipient of a crate of cassaba melons from a friend in Asia Minor.

E. D. Horkheimer, secretary-treasurer of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company of Long Beach, California, is making a business trip to New York, taking with him 40,000 feet of negative and positive films, first class feature dramas which he is to deliver to a great marketing corporation, recently formed to handle the products of the Balboa studios and other large concerns.

The newest addition to the Vitagraph family at Santa Monica, Calif., is little Miss Mower, aged one week. Papa Jack is receiving congratulations.

The Mary Anderson theater in Louisville, Kentucky, is using the Alco program. The engagement of Ethel Barrymore in "The Nightingale" was so successful, the management says, that they have booked this All Star Feature Corporation's production for a return date.

George Kleine announces that Harry Mestayer has been secured to play the role of the thief in his film version of George M. Cohan's and Sam H. Harris' famous comedy, "Stop Thief," work on which has already commenced at the Kleine studio, 11 East Fourteenth street, New York City. He will play opposite Mary Ryan, who will handle the role of the maid.

Seated in the office of the Kinetophote Corporation as the fire in the West Forty-Fifth street exchange building broke out, Edwin August made a leap for the fire escape of the Leavitt building, whose rear faces the back of the Exchange building. Upon his arrival there, in the down pouring rain, August attracted the attention of an employe of the Strand Film Company, who have in their possession a number of the Eaco negatives, and ordered him to get the negatives from his office and throw same over to August. The Strand employe carried out August's orders, and can after can of the Eaco negatives flew from one fire escape to the other.

While playing the role of Governor Stoneman, the great commoner in D. W. Griffith's production of "The Clansman," Ralph Lewis became temporarily crippled after wearing a thick soled boot for several days.

Kate Price, one of the leading comediennes of the Vitagraph Company, has been invited to play the Wurlitzer Organ at the Vitagraph theater. She has some reputation as a player, but her performance on the big instrument will put her to the test. She has selected as her repertoire, the national Irish airs, also "Mother Machree," "It's a long Way to Tipperary," and "Tip Top Tipperary Mary."

A thorough preparation for perfect projection was made by manager S. L. Rothapfel, of the Strand Theater, before Jesse L. Lasky and David Belasco showed "The Rose of the Rancho" to an invited audience at the Belasco Theater last Sunday night. A complete installation of projection apparatus and accessories was made. The screen which was used for the presentation of this first Lasky-Belasco release was the radium gold fibre screen manufactured by the Atsco department of the Alco Film Corporation.

George Kleine has named November 22 as the official release date for "Julius Caesar." Bookings for the subject can be made for any time after that date through the various Kleine branch offices.

Since the cost of living began climbing skyward, Anita Stewart one of the leading ladies of the Vitagraph Company, has been figuring on how to lower it. After mature deliberation, she concluded that raising chickens would be an enterprise productive of results, so about a month ago she purchased a chicken farm.

The cast of the Life Photo Film Corporation in "Springtime" now being put on in New Orleans, is unique in that it is composed entirely of married folks, with the exception of Florence Nash.

In the American Film Manufacturing Company's two-reel subject "The Girl in Question," the son of an old fashioned mother becomes infatuated with two girls of entirely different types and does not know which he prefers to marry. So cleverly is the plot divulged that until the last scene doubt reigns.

There's an unsentimental policeman on Jackson boulevard in Chicago, a copper who never, never was thrilled by seeing the "real thing" on the screen. Otherwise he wouldn't have stepped in and spoiled a nice bit of realism that was planned for the World Film Corporation's "The Pit" last week in front of the board of trade. No less distinguished a star than Wilton Lackaye himself was out there in the fifty-mile-an-hour icy cyclone posing for the scene when the policeman interfered and spoiled it all. Then Lackaye and the crowd of several hundred curious spectators moved over onto Michigan boulevard and took the scene in front of the Auditorium.

An exhibitor in Clyde, Kansas, has become so fascinated with the work of Miriam Nesbitt in the Edison films that he has decided to name the latest addition to his family "Miriam." This is the fifth infant named after Miss Nesbitt.

While working in a western two-reeler, scheduled for early release, Henry Stanley, barely escaped serious injury at the Tucson studios of the Eclair Company. The scene called for the artist to be pursued by several horsemen and everything went well until the party came close to the camera. At this point Stanley's horse stumbled and fell. His pursuers being too close to turn around, rode right over him. After an agonizing suspense the dust cleared away and the directors and players were startled and relieved to hear the young fellow call "I'm not hurt."

Two wolf-hounds that have served on the German police force for five years are being used by Director France of the Edison Company to locate the foot-prints of a band of kidnapers in the two-reel drama which he is now producing.

Walter Edwin, who directs the Mary Fuller-Imp Company, never wore a hat until he came to this country. That may seem extremely strange, but it's a fact, and he will vouch for it.

Edward M. Roskam, with the cast of the Life Photo Film Corporation, stopping at the Grunewald Hotel, New Orleans, advises us that he is being besieged with applications from all prospective Mary Pickfords residing in New Orleans, begging for engagaments in motion pictures.

That the life of a moving picture actress affords all sorts of variation was readily verified recently when Mary Fuller, the Victor star, acting upon an idea she received while her company was taking a scene on the lower east side of New York, went down into the lower regions of New York and from a huge basket extracted all sorts of goodies for the family of five hungry children and an invalid mother.

Arthur S. Kane, formerly general manager of the Eclectic Film Company, has been appointed assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation and took up his duties as Lewis J. Selznick's right-hand man on November 30.

Commencing November 29, "The Seats of the Mighty," a photoplay based on Sir Gilbert Parker's novel of the same name, will be presented at the Casino theater by the World Film Corporation. Lionel Barrymore is featured and among the players associated with him in this production are Millicent Evans, Glen White, Lois Meredith, Grace Leigh, Marjorie Bonner and Thomas Jefferson.

The Picture Playhouse Film Company, since its organization, has opened new offices on the average of almost two a month, and now has nine branch offices in all the leading cities as far west as Chicago, taking in two branch offices in Canada. The new Pittsburgh office will be at 420 Pennsylvania avenue.

Although Lillian Russell has received many glittering offers to appear in a photoplay version of her great success "Wildfire," she turned a deaf ear to all until she met Lewis J. Selznick. Through his characteristic and energetic methods, he was able to secure her signature to a contract which insured for the World Film Corporation her appearance before the camera. Work has already started upon "Wildfire," which will be released in January.

During the present rainy season in California the unheavenly twins, Lyons and Moran, have kept things lively at the Universal studio—especially around their dressing room, which has been more unmusical and unquiet than ever. Director Christie drops in occasionally and is about the biggest and baddest boy of all of them.

"Lay Down Your Arms," the Great Northern Film Company's picturization of the novel by Baroness Bertha Von Suttner, was a feature of the meeting of the New York Peace Society, one recent afternoon, at the Hotel Astor. The picture was followed by applause and a talk on "The World War" by Dr. David Starr Jordan.

Despite the inclement weather, for the rainy season has commenced in California, Harry Pollard has started on his first four-reel feature for the American Company. Margarita Fischer will be starred in the features and Harry Pollard will take his own lead in the first picture, but in future will only act when there is some part which really calls for his services, confining himself to the producing the rest of the time.

Francis Ford is making preparations for a tremendous six-reeler entitled "The Campbells Are Coming." It is a story of the Sepoy rebellion.

Carlyle Blackwell has started a subscription list for the benefit of a Los Angeles Children's hospital, and Ruth Hartman and Mrs. Charlie Murray are canvassing the coast studios.

Henry Otto, the director at the American studios, recently gave a splendid example of what quick thinking and a cool head will do. In a scene in his two-reeler "Waiting" the action called for a landslide and a capital one was secured, but, as George Field was acting, Otto suddenly saw a huge boulder descending and by giving Field some cool directions so that he moved in time to avoid being seriously hurt, he both saved the scene and the actor.

J. Warren Kerrigan seems to have a corner on the actresses. In each of his two reelers included in the "Terence O'Rourke" series he has adventures with different girls.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Pathe Daily News—No. 78—PATHE—NOVEMBER 18.—This issue contains pictures of the Indians at the Tercentenary Exposition in New York exhibiting their industrial arts, of the cross-country runners competing for the New England intercollegiate championship at Boston, Mass. Views of the six day bicycle race at Madison Square Garden, N. Y., the burning the East Seventh street school in Los Angeles, Calif., and the sailing of the U. S. collier Jason loaded with Christmas gifts for the European war sufferers from Brooklyn, N. Y. The war section has views of the troops and war operations from Nantes, St. Quentin, Toulouse and Paris, France.

Pathe Daily News No. 79—PATHE—NOVEMBER 23.—In this issue one see Governor O. B. Colquitt of Texas presiding over the presentation ceremonies at which the battleship Texas received a sixty-eight piece silver service from the people of the state. At Wilmington, Delaware, Directum I wins the world's fastest harness horse race, a mile in 2.03¼. At Phoenix, Arizona, Barney Oldfield wins a 700-mile race over mountain ranges and across the desert. In the war section one has a late picture of Lord Roberts, taken in London, views of the refugees from Belgium fleeing into Holland and numberless scenes of camp life.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial—No. 77—SELIG—NOVEMBER 23.—Views of the Christmas ship sailing from New York, delegates of the American Federation of Labor gathered at Philadelphia, world's biggest tank steamer, John D. Archbold dry docked in New York, delegates of the National American Suffrage Association gathered at Nashville, Tenn. A glimpse of the Princeton-Yale foot-ball game and numerous views from the European war zone particular interest centering in those of the British Indian troops.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 78—SELIG—NOVEMBER 26.—This issue contains views of the Lexington high school girl's hockey team defeating another team on their home grounds, freight barges with cargoes of goods from New Orleans going to Chicago over a waterway course, the Malakka, a motor ship, completes a voyage from Norway to Los Angeles via the Panama Canal, the opening of the curb market in New York, which was closed at the beginning of the war, and scenes taken in and about the City of Brussels.

A Mother's Way—BIOGRAPH—NOVEMBER 30.—A country lad goes to the city to make his fortune. He feels that his mother, who later follows him, is a hindrance to his career and hides her away in a suburb. Anxious to marry a broker's daughter, he stakes his all on the stock market and plunges. The market goes against him and he faces ruin. The mother meanwhile determines to return to the country and is on her way to see her boy when the son's fiancee, in an automobile, knocks her down. As the boy is on the point of committing suicide, his secretary hands him a packet and says "a woman left this with her love." The packet contains a large sum of money, which he uses to extricate himself from ruin, believing that the money came from his fiancee. Later, he learns that the money was supplied by his mother, it being the price of the old home which saved him from ruin. Mother and fiancee have met and as the picture closes a wedding is imminent.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

Wood B. Wedd Goes Snipe Hunting—EDISON—NOVEMBER 30.—The funny part of this picture is not in the main plot, but in the way in which it is enacted. The greater part of the picture is given to the carrying out of an old trick, that of enticing a fellow a long ways from home and leaving him in a wilderness holding a bag into which the others are to drive the snipe, while they return home. The incidents leading up to and following the snipe hunt are amusing and the picture should go well with the average audience. C. R. C.

A Maid of War—ESSANAY—NOVEMBER 30.—Sweedie, Wallace Beery's well-known character, forms the pivot around which a grand free-for-all tussle takes place in this production. Sweedie runs a saloon, with a donkey and parrot for partners. Two hoboes steal some of her "wares" and take the plugs from her wine barrels, turning the liquid loose. She chases them through the streets, and finally gets into a house where a wedding is about to take place. When the guests attempt to throw Sweedie out the groom interferes and is himself ejected. Partners in misery, Sweedie and the groom decide to travel through life together. A very amusing offering. C. J. C.

Her Bitter Lesson—KALEM—(TWO REELS)—NOVEMBER 30.—Evelyn's utter selfishness makes her disregard her husband's plea that she economize. All his money is tied up in a big deal and he borrows $1,000 to cope with possible emergencies, placing all the money at home in his safe. Evelyn uses the money to meet debts incurred by her extravagance and at a reception flirts with Hughson, is seen by her husband, and Hughson is ejected from the house. Later the husband discovers Evelyn has taken the $1,000 from the safe, and although the big deal goes through, netting him a fortune, he pretends to have lost all, and compels his wife to move into a cheap apartment, where she has to do the housework. He purposely adopts a harsh attitude, and, although rebellious, Evelyn admires her husband's firmness. When Hughson calls again and Evelyn holds him off with a revolver, the husband enters, trounces the intruder, and, believing that his wife has now learned her lesson, he confesses his ruse.

Fate's Tangled Threads (No. 12 of the "Beloved Adventurer" series)—LUBIN—NOVEMBER 30.—Foiled in his plan to obtain the Golden Hope mine, Monte Carson determines to abduct and hold Betty for ransom. Concealing the girl in a little tavern on the waterfront at Whitehaven, he awaits his chance to escape from England, leaving Lord Cecil in despair over the strange disappearance of his bride. Meanwhile Meg, a little peasant lass, shuts her eyes to the love of her sweetheart, Ned Alwince, Lord Cecil's chauffeur, and plans to elope with a stranger. After the two have departed, Meg's mother appeals to Lord Cecil for help and Cecil, accompanied by Ned, starts out in a high-powered car to overtake the elopers. They run their quarry to earth at Whitehaven and Meg is not only restored to her sweetheart, but Lord Cecil beholds Betty, his missing wife, just being helped aboard a motor boat by Carson. Though the boat disappears in the darkness, Cecil's despair is lightened by the knowledge that Betty still lives, and there is hope of her yet being restored to him. Arthur V. Johnson and Lottie Briscoe featured.

Everything Against Him—VITAGRAPH—NOVEMBER 30.—Having struck it rich, John Grant, a miner, goes to town, where he meets an old friend, Jim Gould, and the two occupy the same room and next morning leave the hotel together. When they part Gould drops a small prospector's pick and Grant picks it up, finding his friend's name on the handle. Later, when a track repairer finds Grant's hat, suitcase and papers, together with several blood spots on the ground, the sheriff is notified and immediately decides that a crime has been committed. Upon Gould's return to town he is arrested, but after the latter has been confined in the country jail and given the third degree, Grant suddenly returns and explains that the blood came as a reuslt of a fight with a hobo, and that in the scuffle many of his belongings were dropped. Gould is at once released and at sight of his old pal becomes almost hysterical with joy. Alfred Vosburgh and George Holt featured.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 79—SELIG—NOVEMBER 30.—Reopening of the wireless station at Tuckerton, N. J., a cross country run of eastern university teams at New Haven, Conn.; the rugby battle between the Leland Stanford, Jr., University and the University of California, and U. S. submarines making a trip through Cape Cod canal are among the interesting events contained in this issue of the weekly.

The Closing Webb—Biograph—(Two Reels)—December 1.—John Graham, a struggling artist, lives with his daughter, Edith. Necessity compels him to borrow from Parsons, a gambler. When Parsons' woman confederate is discharged, the gambler gets Edith for her father's sake, to take her place. For appearances' sake Edith tells her father she is Parsons' wife, though to Bruce, a wealthy clubman who visits the gambling rooms, the girl poses as the gambler's daughter. Later, when Parsons would have her betray Bruce, she refuses and Parsons casts her adrift. She marries Bruce, but insists that Graham, her real father, must never be known to her husband. When Graham later places her portrait in an art exhibit, it is seen by Bruce and he, becoming curious, is told that Edith once posed for the artist. Parsons returning from abroad, learns Edith's address and calls on her. In fear she offers him money, which he spurns, declaring, "it is you I want." Later Parsons sends a note arranging a meeting with Edith in his rooms and she, terrified lest he inform her husband of their past relations, meets him. Meanwhile Edith's baby has found the note and has made it into a cloak for her doll. Graham calling at Bruce's home, discovers the note and learns of Edith's tryst. Hurrying to Parsons' room, he arrives to find his daughter and the gambler quarreling. In an endeavor to interfere he is wounded by a knife thrust and Parsons, frightened, drops dead. Edith and her father are fearful lest they be implicated in the investigation of the gambler's death, but they escape and Edith wisely confesses all to her husband.

A Double Elopement—Edison—December 1.—A good clean comedy in which a widow and widower fall in love, the former concealing the fact that she has a daughter and the latter, that he has a son. They attempt to elope and at the station meet the boy and girl, who are also eloping. Explanations follow and they decide to make it a double elopement. C. R. C.

The Girl of the Open Road—Edison—December 1.—This is the second release of the "Olive" series featuring Mabel Trunnelle. It is quite an improvement over its predecessor, containing more exciting action and advancing the plot considerably by its quick succession of developments. Drew Martin, the scheming cousin, cuts a hole in the bottom of Vance Coleman's canoe in an attempt to do away with him, and inherit the Coleman fortune himself. The timely arrival of Olive with a rope defeats his plans, and the exhausted Vance climbs up the face of the steep cliff bordering the lake, to dry land. The gypsy girl is a wonderful violinist and is invited to play at the Coleman lodge. Here the jealousy of one of Vance's sweethearts almost causes her undoing, at least socially, but Olive's quick wit and nerve save her and her recital makes a big hit.

The Buffer—Essanay—December 1.—This is a pleasing offering which teems with dramatic action. While nothing sensational appears in it it holds one's interest all the time that it is on the screen. Richard C. Travers and Rapley Holmes have the leading roles. John Harms determines to crush Richard Freely, the district attorney, and when the latter's brother, a weakling, forges some checks Harms sees his opportunity. He warns Freely that unless he send his brother to prison he will expose him and take his office away. Harms also has a worthless son, whose one redeeming trait is his love for a younger brother. Freely learns that Harms' son has also forged a check and offers to "hush the matter up" if Harms will do the same for his brother. The hard hearted man, however, refuses, and says he will send his son to prison first, but the younger son runs into the room at that moment and asked the worthless boy to come and play with his, as he is lonesome. It is too much for Harms and he agrees to forgive and forget all. C. J. C.

Bud, Bill and the Waiter—Kalem—December 1.—Bud, courting Mildred, is cut out by Bill, his big brother, and hungers for revenge. Bill, in an ice cream parlor with Mildred, escapes having to pay for his order when a fly is discovered in his dish and he complains to the landlord. This gives Bill an idea. When he takes Mildred out to dine he tucks a fly or two in his vest pocket and manages, by dropping them in the dish, to again escape without paying for his food. Bud, grown desperate, writes to six former sweethearts of Bill and summons them all to Wrector's, where Bill is to dine that evening with Mildred. The manager learns how Bill is apt to drop flies into the food to escape payment, and prepares to foil the trick. All six of Bill's sweethearts descend upon him, and he has to "buy" for the crowd. Working the fly trick unsuccessfully, he is ejected from the place and Bud, rescuing Mildred, is once more restored to his former place in her affections. Ruth Rowland and Bud Duncan featured.

Coupon Collectors—Lubin—December 1.—Mr. and Mrs. Gink are coupon fiends and buy all sorts of articles in order to get coupons. The wash women, street cleaners and blind fiddlers give coupons and the local dentist offers four coupons for every tooth pulled. The Ginks store their coupons in a safe in the living room, but two burglars break into the house and, despising the money and jewelry, escape with the coupons. When arrested they are permitted to pay their fines in coupons, since the sergeant is a coupon fiend himself. On the same reel is

For A Widow's Love—Lubin—December 1.—The judge and the mayor both love the dashing young widow, Daisy Dunne. They quarrel over her and the quarrel eventually leads to a challenge to a duel. Daisy is delighted to know that she is to be the heroine of a duel, but when neither man has fallen after two shots have been fired, it is discovered that the guns are loaded with blanks. The two duelists decide to turn the tables on Daisy and with the aid of some red paint and bandages they soon appear as candidates for the undertaker. When Daisy sees them she is hysterical and flees the scene, followed by the doctor, who administers an opiate in the shape of an engagement ring. May Hotely featured.

The Rival Stage Lines—Selig—December 1.—Tom Mix and the Selig cowboys are seen to splendid advantage in this one-reel western drama, the story of which concerns Harding Martin and David Patrick, both desperately in love with Elsie Johnson. Both young men decide to go west and buy rival stage lines. The rivalry continues in business, and when it is announced that the local expressman will award the contract to the stage concern making the quickest trip to a neighboring town, and Elsie appears on the scene and promises to marry the winner. Martin and Patrick each plot to delay the other fellow's stage by a hold-up, thus defeating him. A band of Indians hold-up one stage, and a band of cow-boys the other. Meanwhile the express manager takes the two stage coaches to the winning point, and not only wins Elsie, but announces the express company will install its own stage line. N. G. C.

Saved from a Life of Crime—Vitagraph—(Two Reels)—December 1.—Tom, a street waif, holds up and robs an old woman with his toy pistol and "blows" his pals to an ice cream treat. The feast is interrupted by the police and Tom is taken to court, where the judge places him on probation. The probation officer, believing that Tom has the making of a good man in him, permits the boy to be adopted by Mr. Barns, a wealthy philanthropist. Amid surroundings of refinement and wealth, the boy grows up to be a fine young man and in time becomes a prominent and successful lawyer. Tom has learned to love Helen, his adopted father's daughter, but on account of his humble origin hesitates about proposing. When a Christmas tree causes a fire in his home, Tom proves such a hero that Helen declares her love for him and the two become engaged. James Morrison and Dorothy Kelly featured.

The Fable of the Club Girls and the Four Times Veteran—Essanay—December 2.—Some very good camera effects are achieved in the opening scenes of this film in which Lillian Drew is featured. A number of girls are used at the club meeting. The photography and direction is worthy of mention. A girls' club is organized to discuss the current evils, principally men. Many theories are exploited by the members of the club, but all have a flaw in them until at last the widow who has been married four times to four entirely different types of men tells what she has learned from actual experience. She shows that in time a woman forgets that there is such a thing as a husband. Moral: Absence makes the heart grow accustomed.

The Prodigal—KALEM—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 2.—Howard Gordon meets Violet, a country girl and his insolent attentions are repulsed by her. His better nature triumphs however and he apologizes for his conduct. Marie, an adventuress, has been trying to ensnare Gordon, but finds him proof against her wiles. Later Violet goes to the city to seek employment, and is amazed to learn that she is engaged by a company of which Gordon is the president. Gordon eventually wins Violet's love, and they are married. Marie, however, resolves to separate the two and leads Gordon to drink. Violet returns to the country, and Gordon, realizing the result of his conduct, follows her and at last effects reconciliation. Tom Moore and Marguerite Curtot featured.

The House of D'Or—LUBIN—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 2.—When D'Or, a plunger, dies he leaves Sanford, his son, an immense fortune and the "House of D'Or," a country mansion. After the death of his father, Rockland, another financier, sets out to "break" Sanford He takes from him eventually the "House of D'Or" and Mary, the girl Sanford loves, acquiring possession on July 1, 1895 remarking to his secretary "this is a memorable day for me, let us remember July 1, 1895." Sanford, ruined, also has occasion never to forget that important date. Years later when Sanford has become a tramp, he meets Barber, a street orator one night, who once more inspires him with the desire to rise in the world. When later Barber is seen by Rockland, now a millionaire, the latter takes him for a poor derelict, gives him a card and tells him that if he will call at his office next day he will give him a job. Barber bets Sanford that the millionaire has some secret in his life which can be so played upon that he can be blackmailed and offers to visit him and name a certain date when the money is to be forthcoming. Sanford suggests July 1, 1895 and the following day when Barber at Rockland's office declares "I have not come for a job, but to demand restitution. Remember July 1, 1895." the millionaire starts at the recollection which this date brings to mind and offers Barber money. With this as a basis, Sanford speculates and eventually is so successful in the stock market as to crush Rockland. This turns the tables on the millionaire, though eventually the two are reconciled.

The Lion Hunter—SELIG—DECEMBER 2.—One of the Selig jungle zoo pictures in which the Selig managerie plays an important part, for in this single-reel subject, two elephants and several lions are strongly featured. Hans Fredericka, a South African Boer, resides with Wilhelmina, his daughter, in a comfortable bungalow. The girl is in love wtih Peter Grosse, a young Boer who lives nearby, though, upon the arrival of Lawrence Stanley, a young English hunter, who has visited them before while on a hunting trip, Wilhelmina is distracted from her love for Peter by the handsome young Englishman, who has given her as a keep-sake a talisman, which she hangs about her neck with a ribbon. Peter becomes jealous, and engages a hostile tribe of blacks to pursue and capture the Englishman. Wilhelmina, endeavoring to illustrate the plot, gets lost in the jungle, and is rescued through the fact that a runaway tame elephant finds the talisman, which she had dropped.

The elephant takes the bauble to camp, and Stanley, recognizing it, hastens to rescue her, on the way saving Peter from a prowling lion. All jealousies are then forgiven and forgotten. Edwin Wallock and Adela Lane featured.

N. G. C.

The Mysterious Mr. Davey—VITAGRAPH—DECEMBER 2.—Though recently married, Henry Murray longs for a flirtation and makes an appointment for dinner with Katie Davey, a former friend, who does not know of his marriage. Murray tells his wife that he is to dine with "Mr. Davey," a lonely old woman-hater, and for a time all goes well. One day he chances to write two notes, one to his wife and the other to Katie and, through getting them in the wrong envelopes, Katie learns that he is married and his wife becomes suspicious of "Mr. Davey." When his wife insists upon meeting the mysterious "Mr. Davey," Murray has published an obituary notice of "Davey" in a newspaper, whereupon his wife implores his forgiveness for doubting him. Didncy Drew featured.

In Quest of a Story—BIOGRAPH—DECEMBER 3.—A magazine writer visits a blind little girl in the slums in order to get material for an article. While there she conceives the idea to pretend to be blind and seek adventure. The Sunday feature writer of a big newspaper encounters her on the street and listens to her pitiful story and she gives the name and address of the real blind girl as her own. Later the reporter saves a child from being run down by a motor car and meets the child's father, a famous eye specialist. When the specialist offers to do anything possible for the reporter by way of payment, he suggests that he see what can be done for the little blind girl. The doctor keeps his word and is eventually able to restore the blind girl's sight. Later the magazine writer and the reporter meet at the hospital and each learns the story of the other, while the child, joyous in her new found sight, blesses both of her benefactors.

Sophie's Fatal Wedding—ESSANAY—DECEMBER 3.—Slippery Slim receives an invitation to attend the wedding of Sophie and Mustang Pete. He is broken hearted, and when he goes to Sophie's home to plead with her he is locked out. He leaves a note telling her that he is going to shoot himself, but he loses his nerve. The night of the wedding, all of Sophie's friends arrive with their presents. It is long past the hour for the minister to arrive. Finally her friends grow impatient, pack up their presents and go home. Slim has hired a bad man to waylay the minister, and when he sees Mustang going to summon the justice of peace, he tacks a sign on the door warning him of smallpox. While Mustang is chasing him, Slim goes in and Sophie is overjoyed at seeing him, and when Mustang returns he is locked out.

The Grip of the Past—LUBIN—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 3.—Jane and Belle are left alone on their dead father's southern plantation. Both girls are cared for by Pedro, a Castilian, who has been their constant companion, but Craven, the overseer who dislikes Pedro, manages, when the stables burn, to have Pedro accused of starting the fire and in anger declares that Pedro is not a Spaniard, but a negro. When Jane shrinks from him, Pedro, broken-hearted, leaves the plantation. Years later, Jane, now married to Gray, who has secured the plantation is unhappy, never having ben able to forget her love for Pedro. Pedro, now a surveyor, is encamped near the plantation. Belle finds by her father's diary that Pedro is after all a Spaniard and several days later she accidentally meets him and eventually confesses her love. Craven, knowing Pedro is in the vicinity, warns Gray to watch Jane, as she is meeting Pedro and after many complications Belle, Jane, Gray, Craven and Pedro all assemble at a rustic platform built over the edge of a cliff over a deep river. Craven has prepared a trap in the platform in the hope of hurling Pedro to his death, but instead Jane is the one to barely escape death, though in a fight, later, between Pedro and Craven, Craven stumbles on the trap-door and plunges into the river hundreds of feet below. Lillie Leslie, Justina Huff and William Cohill featured.

The Man That Might Have Been—VITAGRAPH—DECEMBER 3.—William Rudd, a store clerk in a small country town, is well nigh distracted over the death of both his wife and new-born son, and constantly dwells upon what might have been if his dear ones lived. He eventually evolves a dream of his departed child, whom he calls Eric and whose growth keeps pace with that of Kittredge, his employer's son. When Kittredge, Jr., cuts new teeth, Rudd imagines his own child undergoing the same process. He follows Eric in his career through school, college and politics in his imagination and eventually sees him achieve the presidency. Next morning when Rudd does not appear at the store, his employer goes to his home and finds Rudd dead in his chair, a beatific smile of satisfaction on his careworn face. William Humphrey featured.

Bertha, the Button-hole Maker—BIOGRAPH—DECEMBER 4.—Bertha and her sweetheart, the foreman, are separated by the boss, a villain, the foreman being fired and Bertha detained at the factory after the other employees have gone home. The foreman, suspecting something wrong, remains behind and eventually traps the villain in the cellar of the factory, after Bertha has been bound and left to drown on the factory floor, the villain having turned on the water so that she shall die by inches. The faithful lover summons the police, who arrive, and after a struggle the villain is given a taste of his own medicine by being ducked.

Making Them Cough Up—Biograph—December 4.—A local reformer, seeking material for his lecture, follows Mr. Gayboy and Mrs. Boob to a cabaret and observes their scandalous proceedings. On the night of the lecture he asks the ladies to withdraw and then announces that a certain married man present took a strange lady to a cabaret and unless he contributes he will be exposed. Practically every man in the room empties his pockets and the reformer decides he has done a good evening's work.

Who Goes There?—Edison—(Two Reels)—December 4.—H. A. De Souchet's famous book of this name is the foundation of this comedy featuring Walter Perkins. Much of its humor must have been in its lines for, though it is a good comedy and above the average of this length, it really could not be termed exceptional. It is at a little disadvantage in having to develop complications before the identity of the characters is clearly fixed in the spectator's mind. This, however, straightens itself out in time as do the mixed-up love affairs of Walter Perkins, Augustus Phillips, Harry Beaumont, Sally Crute, Elsie MacLeod and Viola Dana. The story revolves about the difficulties encountered by three young military officers in obtaining leave from duty to become married. Lieutenant Newman, or "Toppy," obtains legitimate leave, but his friends, Upton and Enright, have to take French leave. The irate fathers arrive at the lovers' rendezvous, storm about and threaten, but finally give their consent to the marriages and assist in the ceremony. C. R. C.

The Place, the Time and the Man—Essanay—(Two Reels)—December 4.—Davis, a young engineer is sent to find a way across a mountain to connect two railroads, saving them from ruin at the hand of a third road. He accomplishes his purposes after much opposition and wins the daughter of the third road's president. A complete review will be found on page 739 of the November 28 issue.

The Devil and Mrs. Walker—Kalem—December 4.—When Mrs. Walker addresses the Shoestring Makers' Union, her daughter, Ethel, takes advantage of the opportunity to elope with Gustave Henri, son of Mrs. Walker's despised neighbors, and Mr. Walker attends a masquerade ball in devil's attire. Mrs. Walker awaits the return of her husband with a rolling pin, but his costume frightens her, and he warns her that in future she is to treat her husband more kindly. The following day Walker is lavished with attentions by his wife, and when Ethel and her husband return home, Walker yanks the daughter into the house, and kicks Gustave into the street. A telegram, telling Walker that he has won first prize at the masquerade ball, is received by Gustave, who gives it to Mrs. Walker. The wife at once understands the mistake she has made and when she proceeds to "beat the devil" Ethel and Gustave make their escape.

A Believer in Dreams—Lubin—December 4.—Helen Ainsley, in the conservatory, waiting for her admirer, Philip, to bring her her fan is charmed by the singing of Bruce McCarroll, the opera star and as a result Helen dreams that night that she is back in the swashbuckling age, in a garden full of masked revelers, and that she is charmed by the singing of one troubadour. In many ways the scene corresponds to the one that night in the conservatory and on awakening she imagines that the dream means that she should marry the singer rather than Philip, her other admirer. She sends for Bruce next morning and after a time the two become engaged. On their marriage day Bruce is detained by having to get rid of an old flame, one of the many with whom he has had affairs in the past and Helen is momentarily overcome by the heat and odors from the flowers in the church, and one more believes herself back in the middle ages. This time, however, she gets a better look at the face of the troubadour who has bewitched her and discovers that he resembles Philip and not Bruce. Accordingly, on awakening she refuses to go on with the wedding and returns the engagement ring to Bruce. At home once more she sends for Philip and their engagement is renewed. Ormi Hawley and Edward Peil featured.

Love's Acid Test—Selig—December 4.—The exciting, though rather obsolete story of a love-sick drug clerk, who puts poison in a prescription made up for a sick man, and after discovering his mistake, rushes wildly to the home of his victim, in the hope that he may arrive in time to prevent the patient taking the medicine. Needless to say, the drug clerk arrives in time and all is well. N. G. C.

The Methods of Margaret—Vitagraph—December 4.—Dick Stanford, an easy-going business man, is imposed upon by Miss Blake, his flirtatious, gum-chewing stenographer. His wife, Margaret, objects to Miss Blake and demands that she be fired, though Stanford insists that he does not interfere with her servants and that she should let him manage his office help. Returning from a trip he finds that she has installed male servants in his home, that the butler is smoking his best cigars, the cook is loudly swearing in the kitchen and things are generally topsy-turvy. When he attempts to change things Margaret requests him not to interfere with her servants. He eventually capitulates, discharges his stenographer and hires a man, whereupon Margaret once more restores the former house servants to their positions.

The Deacon's Son—Biograph—December 5.—The deacon's profligate son leaves for the city and at his boarding house he meets a girl with whom he falls in love and to whom he is eventually married. The boy does not give up his evil ways and some years later his wife and baby visit the husband's native village. The child is placed in the care of a stranger and the mother secures a position as maid in the home of her husband's former friend, George. The deacon, calling one day at the place where the child has been left, learns it is the daughter of the maid and straightway visits George and insists, "you must send her away at once, she is a disgrace to the community." Instead of discharging the maid, George asks her to marry him and the deacon is much surprised over what he thinks a scandal. The next morning a tramp is thrown from a passing freight train, is found and taken to the home of George, where it is discovered he is the deacon's son. When the deacon again visits George to find out why the maid has not been discharged he is amazed to be confronted by his son, who acknowledges the maid as his wife, ere he dies from exposure and the bruises he received by being thrown from the train.

It's a Bear—Edison—December 5.—A successful comedy though founded on an improbable plot. A tramp, dressed as a bear, causes quite a bit of excitement at a country hotel. Buskins, Jean Gray's fiance, is sent out to kill it and thinks he has done so when the tramp's pal discloses the secret and extorts money on the threat of exposing his fine piece of bravery. Buskins pays, and is then threatened with arrest by the sheriff for hunting without a license. As the guests walk back to the hotel they hear angry voices and turning, discover the "bear" and his pal quarrelling over the division of the money. This ends Buskins' chances with Jean, and his appeal to the tramps to return his money is met with a hearty laugh. C. R. C.

Broncho Billy's Judgment—Essanay—December 5.—Broncho Billy and his pal are in love with the same girl. Broncho suggests that they go to her home and settle the matter. They arrive just in time to see the girl marrying a gambler who is known to be a good-for-nothing by both Broncho and his pal. They decide to leave the country together. One morning Broncho awakes to find a note from his pal, saying that he fears the girl living with that man and intends to devote his life to watching over her. Ten years later the gambler is killed in a saloon by an unknown man. Broncho is now sheriff and sets out to find the criminal. He discovers him to be his old time pal. Broncho takes off his star rather than arrest his pal for defending their old time sweetheart.

The Stolen Engine—Kalem—December 5.—Another of "The Hazards of Helen" series. Tom O'Grady, section foreman, is discharged for carelessness, and while walking gloomily down the track, finds a valuable package, lost from an express car. Helen, telegrapher at Quarry, is requested to search for the package and soon comes upon O'Grady, who has been knocked unconscious by Durham and Keeson, two yeggs. Stealing the package, the crooks hold up the crew of a freight engine and compel the engineer to go ahead at full speed. Helen takes possession of a locomotive on a nearby side-track and sets out to follow the thieves. Traveling on a parallel track they overtake the freight engine, and Helen leaps from her locomotive to the freight engine, and there manages to overpower the two yeggs. The brave girl recovers the package and her story results in O'Grady's re-instatement. Helen Holmes, featured.

Brown's Cook—LUBIN—DECEMBER 5.—Bob Johnson is invited to dinner at the home of his friend, Judson Brown, and meets not only the new Mrs. Brown, but also the cook who has provided a splendid dinner. Johnson, returning home, discovers his own cook gone and conceives the idea of kidnapping Brown's cook. He engages a gunman to kidnap the cook, but the gunman abducts Mrs. Brown instead. Brown telephones Mrs. Johnson what has happened and trouble commences. Eventually, after much confusion, the two men come to an understanding and the complications are straightened out. May Hotely featured. On the same reel is

"He Wanted His Pants"—LUBIN—DECEMBER 5.—James Jimson wins several hundred dollars playing poker and returns home. His snores awake his wife and she finds not only the money, but a hole in one of his pockets and takes them down stairs to mend. Lacking thread she goes to a neighbor for it. Jimson wakens and finds neither his wife or his pants, and decides both have been stolen. Clad in a frock coat, silk hat and a table cover, he rushes out on the street and calls for a policeman. They eventually locate Mrs. Jimson and both the pants and the money are restored to their owner. Raymond McKee and Frances Ne Moyer featured.

Her Sister—SELIG — DECEMBER 5.—A dramatic tragedy from the pen of Gilson Willets in which Stella Razeto and Adda Gleason have the leading roles, those of Molly and Kate Adams, two pretty sisters, who live at home with their invalid mother, and are employed in a department store Kulp one of the floor walkers in the store, becomes smitten with the charms of Molly, though his intentions are dishonorable. When Molly is threatened with discharge, Kulp makes her believe he will assist her, though in doing so he compromises her. She wears home a gold bracelet given her by Kulp, and Kate, her sister, fearing the worst, conceals a poisoned dagger in her waist, and sets out to visit the Kulp home. Vengeance precedes her, for Kulp in a sub-normal condition is killed by the sting of a wasp, the poison having entered his juglar vein. Eventually Molly finds a home and a true lover in Brooks, the manager of the store, while Kate wins the affections of Dr. Holt, the family physician. N. G. C.

Mutual Program

Mr. Hadley's Uncle—KOMIC.—Hadley writes his uncle, whom he has never seen, advising him to invest some of his money. The uncle wires Hadley saying he will call on him and bring money with him. In the meantime Mr. Muchmoney escapes from an asylum and wanders into Hadley's office. Ethel, thinking he is the rich uncle, detains and tries to entertain him for Hadley. The keepers trace him to the office, the real uncle arrives after many painful experiences, and things are squared.

Mutual Weekly—No. 100—MUTUAL—NOVEMBER 26.—Several hundred feet of the latest pictures from the seat of war, a close up view of the U. S. cruiser Tennessee which was recently fired upon by the Turks and a recent picture of Lord Roberts, England's fighting general, who died recently. The Beggar Child—AMERICAN—(TWO REELS)—NOVEMBER 30.—A stunning American feature, staged among beautiful scenic backgrounds. Ed Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood are featured in the story which describes the life history of Hugo, a poor artist, who is inspired to paint a great picture, which wins him both fame and fortune. He adopts his little model, and when she grows to womanhood, she becomes the wife of Dan Street, an American art student, who has met and fallen in love with her. See review on page 777, this issue. N. G. C.

Cupid and a Dress Coat—BEAUTY—DECEMBER 1.—Margarita Fisher and Harry Pollard in a clever little comedy dealing with the love affairs of Ethel Peyton, a pretty society girl, who is adored by both Sam Reynolds and Henry Warner, room-mates. Each plans to attend a ball at Ethel's home, but when Sam tears his dress coat, he helps himself to Henry's, and Henry, later, has to mend the only remaining coat, as best he can, in order to get to the ball. Arrived at the social function, Henry is embarrassed to have the coat rip again, but Ethel comes to his assistance, and by a clever subterfuge regains his own coat, which Sam has been wearing. Henry, meanwhile, has found Sam's engagement ring in the pocket of the coat he mended, and triumphs over Sam by, himself, placing it on Ethel's finger. N. G. C.

The Old Good-for-Nothing—MAJESTIC—DECEMBER 1.—The titular role is that of a man who is cast off by his family because his mining investments have been declared worthless. His wife then spends her time trying to marry her daughter to money. Denby, a wealthy young fellow, falls into the trap without having seen the girl's father. Just before the marriage ceremony he discovers the father hidden in a coat closet, and insists that he, and not the selfish son Oscar, give away the bride. Thereafter Denby and the old man are chums, and the father tells his son-in-law of his abandoned mine. Denby becomes interested, and invests his entire fortune in it. When the rest of the family learns of it they are furious. At first the report is that the mine is worthless, but later on, when properly worked, it proves to be all that the good-for-nothing had believed it to be. Later father meets his unworthy son, now runied, and gives him the proceeds of the mine's first dividend.

The Strength O' Ten—AMERICAN—DECEMBER 2.—A temperance story of the mountains in which William Garwood and Vivian Rich have the leading roles. Betty, a mountain girl, is beloved by a score or more of the rough natives in the settlement, but on account of the misery she suffers, due to her father's drunkenness, Betty does not respond to the love of any of her suitors, as she knows that all of the boys are heavy drinkers. When Jep, a hunter, enters Betty's life, she is so delighted to discover that he is sober and gallant, that she decides, if he can withstand the refusal of his proposal without taking to drink, that she will marry him. She makes the test and, though sorely tempted, Jep resists temptation by proving his strength superior to all ten of her suitors in a rough and tumble scrap which results in her acceptance of him. Jep so conclusively proves his metal that the rough mountaineers determine to forswear drink in the hope that they may become as strong as Jep. N. G. C.

A Romance of Old Holland—(TWO REELS)—BRONCHO—DECEMBER 2. — Hulda Mott, a pretty Dutch girl lives in an old mill with her father, the miller, Absolom Van Spratt a wealthy old man, holds notes from Hulda's father for the mill. Absolom wishes to marry Hulda, but she is in love with Peter Veldt, a fisherboy. Peter leaves on a fishing trip, after first gaining Hulda's consent to marry him upon his return. Absolom arranges to get rid of Peter. During the trip Peter and another man are out in a small boat with fishing nets and are stranded at sea. At last Peter sees an old derelict and manages to get aboard. His companion dies. Peter finds the crew of the derelict all dead from a fever and he runs the vessel into port. In the meantime Hulda's father has persuaded her to give her consent to marry old Absolom. Peter returns just in time to prevent the wedding. Old Absolom upon seeing Peter drops dead from heart failure, as also does the captain, who supposes Peter to have perished at sea. Peter returns with a fortune, which enables the father of Hulda to keep the mill and leaves sufficient to keep them all the rest of their lives.

The Vigil—(Two Reels)—Domino—December 3.—Kamura, a poor Japanese fisherman has arranged to have his daughter marry Owaru, against her will. Kenjiro, son of a wealthy Japanese merchant is in a wreck at sea and is washed on the wreckage near Mira's home. She rescues him, they fall in love and her engagement with Owaru is cancelled. Kenjiro is appointed "One Year Godmaster," a Japanese custom, which although quite an honor requires him to live the life of a hermit for one year, and if a calamity comes to the community it is supposed to be caused by some negligence on the part of the God-Master to his religious duties. A ship from Asia brings the plague to this village and Owaru fans the fires of suspicion against Kenjiro. Kenjiro is put in prison. Believing Owaru guilty of having drugged Kenjiro, Mira impersonates one of Owaru's ancestors and plays upon his religious fears. She frightens him and he falls over a precipice. Dying, he confesses to having drugged Kenjiro.

The Lucky Shot—Reliance—December 2.—Clark loses his job in the East, and goes West prospecting, promising his mother that he will send for her as soon as he has made good. He secures a position in a mine, and is one day entrusted with a large sum of money to take across the mountains. On the way he determines to steal the money and leave the country. An outlaw takes a shot at Clark, and the would-be victim finds that the bullet which passes through his hat has chipped off a bit of rock, disclosing a rich vein of gold. He abandons his intention of stealing his employer's money, establishes a claim to the land, and sends for his mother.

Mother of the Shadows—(Two Reels)—Kay Bee—December 4.—Laughing Moon, sister of the Sioux chief, saves the life of Lieut. Eldridge, after he protects her from a drunken Mexican. The friendship ripens into love. Sometime later, the chief arrives at the post with his tribe and Laughing Moon and demands to see the Colonel, whom he informs that Laughing Moon has a child, of which one of his officers is the father. The Colonel orders all the officers before him and tells Laughing Moon to pick out the man. She refuses to betray Eldridge, but he admits it. The Colonel demands that he marry her at once. This is done. As time passes, Laughing Moon realizes that her husband is ashamed of her. The Chief disobeys the Colonel's orders regarding hunting, and in the dispute that follows one of his warriors is placed under arrest. The chief attacks the fort. During the battle a gate is left unguarded and Laughing Moon, using her arm as a bolt, holds it shut. She dies a heroine in the eyes of her husband and in the annals of posterity.

Who Shot Bud Walton?—Reliance—(Two Reels)—December 5.—Adapted from the story of this name in the Popular Magazine by George Pattullo. Bud Walton and Jeff Hardin are bitter enemies, and both are "bad men." To preserve peace the town is divided in two sections, one of which is to be Walton's tramping ground, and the other, Hardin's. One day Hardin and Walton come face to face in a saloon. Walton has the drop on the other, and fires, but drops a second later, dead. The sheriff's investigation proves that Walton was killed by a 30-30 rifle bullet. Hardin's gun is a 45-calibre revolver. Slim Terry is arrested for the crime, and confesses, but he is contradicted by Tillie, his sweetheart, who claims to have fired the fatal shot because Walton had bothered her and run Slim out of town. The judge's verdice is that Walton just died, and the town citizens offer to stake Slim and Tillie to a wedding.

A Question of Courage—Majestic—(Two Reels)—December 6.—A story of the Civil War. A widow's three sons enlist at Lincoln's call for volunteers, and shortly afterwards two of them are killed. The mother cannot bear to lose the third son, and detains him, as the rest of his troop ride out to battle. The boy is charged with cowardice, and is court-martialed. He refuses to speak in his own behalf. General Grant, on the way to camp, stops at the widow's house, and learns the reason for the flags that drape two of the chairs at the supper table. He arrives at camp during the court-martial, exonerates the boy, and orders him to report for duty. When the war is over the boy returns home safely, and his mother thankfully folds him to her breast.

Universal Program

Animated Weekly No. 142—Universal—November 25.—Scenes aboard one of the kaiser's battleships; King Baggot, Universal star, conferring with Mayor Mitchell in regard to aiding the war sufferers; close-up views of Secretary of War Lindley M. A Lonely Salvation-Victor—(Two Reels)—November 30.—Steve is the name of a young woman, whose environments have always been those of the harder side of life. She is trained by her father to steal, and one night enters the home of Stonleigh. He notifies the police, but learning that the thief is a girl, he hides her in an adjoining room and, after the police leave, has a talk with her, at the end of which Steve determines to follow his suggestion to go West and reform. Often the temptation to return to her former ways is hard, but Stonleigh's vision rises before her and aids her to resist it. Suddenly his letters stop coming. She returns to the East and learns that Stonleigh is dead.

A Barber Shop Feud—Crystal—December 1.—A slap-stick comedy in which two barbers are seen courting the manicurist, Myrtle, during working hours. One succeeds in having the other fired, and the latter's form of revenging his discharge nearly wrecks the shop. After the free-for-all fight in which everyone becomes covered with paint the discharged barber steps in, secures his old position, straightens out the shop, and wins the fair Myrtle's hand.

Charley Woos Vivian—Crystal—December 1.—Slowboy loves Vivian Catchon, but is too bashful to propose. The boss offers to give him a few pointers on love-making, and, while Slowboy peeks through the keyhole, he proposes to Vivian and is acepted. When she learns that he is only fooling she grows angry, and sues him for breach of promise. After considerable argument they decide to let the matter stand as it is, and anounce their engagement, much to Slowboy's sorrow. On the same reel with "A Barber Shop Feud."

Called Back—Gold Seal—(Four Reel)—December 1.—Dr. Manuel Ceneri and Sig. Macari are two conspirators in London, fighting for what they believe to be the freedom of Italy. To further their cause they appropriate money belonging to Anthony March's inheritance. When Ceneri's nephew starts an investigation Macari kills him. The shock of her brother's death affects Pauline's mind, and leaves her memory a blank. Gilbert Vaughan, a wealthy gentleman, meets Pauline, and becomes infatuated with her, but does not know, until after their marriage, that her mind is a blank. In time her memory is restored, and she remembers the events leading to Anthony's death. In the final denouement the conspirators are seen to meet their just deserts, and Vaughan and Pauline look forward to a new and happy married life.

The Girl Stage Driver—Eclair—(Two Reels)—December 2.—Webster Cullison, director-in-chief of Eclair, has again demonstrated his ability to make a film crowded with punches. The story tells of a plucky western girl who takes her dead father's place as stage driver, and single-handed brings to justice two desperados who have terrorized the small western town. Edna Payne as the girl stage driver and Norbert A. Myles as the sheriff lend true western personality to the story and the hold-up of the stage coach, running fight with the bandits and their final capture in a deserted well, form most exciting and interesting incidents. C. R. C.

The Wise Guys—Joker—December 2.—Father and son confide in each other about their respective engagements, but do not know that they have both given diamonds to the same girl. One night the son calls on his fiancee, and is pushed into the clothes closet when a rap is heard. Enter father, who also is relegated to the clothes closet when someone else is heard at the door. They quarrel over the girl, and finally burst down the closet door. A stalwart and angry man, who says he is the girl's husband, drives them from the house.

The Young Philanthropist.—IMP—DECEMBER 3.—Matty plays the good Samaritan in this release of the "Universal Boy" series. He takes a sickly infant from the hands of a little girl of the slums, and brings it to the Nathan Straus pasteurized milk department. The girl tells her mother of the occurrence, and the woman hurries to the milk station and demands the child. The nurses point out to her the benefit of sanitary feeding, and she realizes that it is for the child's good. On Matty's appeal the rich man's wife has the poor family sent to the country until the father is able to work, and then secures him a good position.

The Mystery of Sea View Hotel—REX—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 3.—Ben Wilson is here featured in a mystery the only clue to which is a queerly perfumed handkerchief. Ben runs down this clue, but without satisfying results. It branches in many directions and involves people who, the detective believes, have no part in the many thefts being committed at the hotel. A new clue develops. Ben is visited in his room twice by a person in the garb of a monk. The first time the odd figure wears women's dancing shoes, and the second time, men's shoes. An attempt is made on Ben's life and he decides to quit the hotel. He engages a female detective to take his place, and sets a trap for the thieves. The first evening the woman wears a beautiful, but fake, diamond necklace. That night the thief takes the bait, and the trap is sprung, disclosing a kleptomaniac.

Love, Luck and Candy—STERLING—DECEMBER 3.—Max, calling upon his sweetheart Dot, finds another rival has won her. He goes to a drug store and orders some poison, but the clerk, seeing that something is wrong, sells him powdered sugar instead, and Max, after mixing the supposed poison with some candy, sends it to Dot. Dot, in the meantime, is thrown over by the new lover, and her love returns to Max; she sends him a note. Max starts on a mad dash to prevent her from eating the candy. In the meantime Dot, after eating some of the candy, is frightened by a rat and falls in a faint. Max, arriving at Dot's home, finds the candy partly gone and frantically 'phones for the ambulance. He thinks he is a murderer and decides to end it all by eating the remainder of the candy. This he does and imagines he is dying. Dot revives, appears in the doorway, and Max thinks it her spirit returned to haunt him. The ambulance has been mixed up with a construction gang and is blown up with dynamite. Dot and Max are happily reunited.

When Lizzie Got Her Polish—NESTOR—DECEMBER 4.—Lizzie is the daughter of a western ranch owner and is very much of a tom-boy. Her uncle, desiring to make the girl his heir, has her sent to an eastern school to be "polished." Here her western manners cause consternation among the other girls, and she becomes the butt of many jibes and practical jokes. One night she redeems herself in the eyes of her schoolmates by capturing, at the point of her revolver, two dangerous thieves who invade the girls' dormitory. When her education is completed she returns to her father's ranch and very much surprises her old cowboy lover by consenting to marry him when he proposes.

The Heart of a Magdalene—POWERS—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 4.—One night at a cafe Leon Hewitt, a young artist, is struck by the symmetrical figure and beauty of the notorious Mlle. Clarine Caldee, and asks her to pose for him for a painting of the Madonna that he is going to enter in a contest. She agrees, much to the amusement of her crowd, and, after posing with an innocent little babe in her arms, becomes changed for the better in character. The life of the gay cafes ceases to attract her. To Leon she is a model—nothing more. The young artist wins the prize and his old sweetheart, Marie, approaches him and offers her love. He accepts in a preoccupied sort of way. Later he is brought to realize that the reformed Clarine is the one who has captured his heart, and they become married. The picture is full of human appeal and touching scenes.

Papa Buys a Bale—VICTOR—DECEMBER 4.—To revenge himself on Elsie's stubborn dad, Reggie raises the man's cotton order from one bale to one hundred bales. A merry war ensues in which bales of cotton figure conspicuously. It ends by Reggie's throwing out a couple of tramps who are trying to impose on dad's good nature, winning the girl by virtue of his chivalry.

Fondling of Father Time—101 BISON—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 5.—A pathetic story of a man who, after having given the best years of his life in the service of his firm, is discharged when he is unable to stand the swift pace of progress. His wife attempts to cheer him up, faithful co-worker that she is, but it is of no use. He cannot secure another position. The old couple fall exhausted one rainy day on a bench in a public square, unnoticed by the crowds engaged in the battle of life. A policeman notices them, approaches and speaks, but they do not answer. Closer examination discloses the fact that their spirits have gone over the Great Divide.

The Dream of a Painting—JOKER—DECEMBER 5.—In an art gallery Henry Peck becomes enamored with the painting of the Princess De Egyptienne, much to his wife's chagrin. He slips from his better half's sight, takes a position in front of the picture, and is startled to see it move. It follows him home. When wifey returns he disguises the princess in clothes and introduces her as the new cook. But this state of affairs cannot last. The women are jealous and the usual thing happens. The princess attacks Peck with a dagger and the man wakes up to find his wife poking him in the ribs with an umbrella.

The Higher Impulse—ECLAIR—DECEMBER 6.—Brent, a drunkard, neglects his wife and child until they leave him and attempt to earn a living themselves. Brent, in the act of stealing a pocketbook, is prevented by an officer of the Salvation Army who is later responsible for the man's reforming. He secures a job as street-cleaner, and one day finds his wife's pocketbook in the street. The only address in it is that of a minister. Brent returns the purse and a happy reunion takes place between him and his estranged wife.

Fido's Dramatic Career—L-KO—DECEMBER 6.—Fido, a dog of the streets, after being kicked and cuffed about by everybody, crawls upon the lawn of a beautiful residence to take a nap. He dreams that he is the pampered pet of the beautiful and wealthy lady and while out with her encounters all the people who have been rough to him, and metes out to them their just deserts. At a contest between Mike's Billy Goat and Fritz's Grizzly Bear he is the guest of honor occupying a private box. From his blissful dream he is rudely awakened by the owner of the lawn turning the hose on him just as he was about to be pursued by the goat into a lake. The situations are unique in view of the fact that all the participants are animals, and throughout the picture the comedy interests are capably sustained.

Woman Finds Love in Untarnished Manhood—REX—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 6.—On completing her college course Agnes Dunne returns home and learns that her parents have arranged her marriage with an effeminate little minister. Her abrupt refusal shocks her straight-laced New England parents and the girl is sent to her uncle's in Kentucky to overcome her rude ways. There she meets two brothers who have a feud of long standing between them. Both fall in love with her and the sheer strength and wonderful physique of one of the brothers attracts her. She is about to confess her love to the giant when she meets a real man, the Reverend Hugh Baxton, to whom she surrenders unconditionally.

Feature Programs

Alco

Little Lord Fauntleroy—EXCLUSIVE—(FOUR REELS)—NOVEMBER 16.—The prologue shows the worthlessness of the two elder sons of the Earl of Dorincourt and the worthiness of his young son Cedric Erroll. Because Cedric is not an aristocrat and marries an American girl his father disowns him. One of the elder sons marries an adventuress, who has deserted her son and husband. The two older boys die in disgrace and Cedric's life is taken by a lingering malady. The earl wishes to have Cedric's son come to him, but the boy and his mother will not part. The opening of the story shows the gentle and loving character of little Fauntleroy. His mother, in destitute circumstances, finally sends the boy to his grandfather, and his manly actions endear him to the old man. The adventuress plans to feather her own nest by having her son become Lord Fauntleroy and the old earl is heartbroken to think Cedric's son is to be supplanted. Through the influence of a boot-black, whom little Fauntleroy had at one time befriended, the first husband of the adventuress is discovered and arrives in time to upset her plans. The earl then takes the little son and the wife of his worthy boy into his home, and together they live in happiness.

Alliance

When Fate Leads Trump—Excelsior—(Four Reels).—The son of a smuggler chief marries against the wish of his father. His wife and child are separated from him; the wife loses her mind and goes away. Later she has married and is again happy, not remembering the past. Her husband reappears and a fight takes place between the two men who love her, her first husband being killed. Complete review will be found on page 773 of this issue.

In last week's issue "The Man Who Could Not Lose" was placed under the Alco program head through an error. This film is being released through the Alliance program.

Box Office

The Winner—Nemo—(Three Reels)—Jack Banks and Tex Reeves are rivals for the hand of Bess Harper, the daughter of a ranch owner. Jack protects a half-breed when he is attacked by Tex. His only weakness is his fondness for drink, and while he is under the influence of liquor Tex is shot by the half-breed. A string of circumstances which are convincingly shown seem to prove conclusively that Jack shot Tex. The wounded man's memory becomes a blank and he is unable to clear Jack. The half-breed and Bess, however, help Jack escape and the half-breed then leaves the West. Jack is captured and again confined in prison, but a letter from the half-breed, who has reached Australia, clears him. Tex regains his memory and sees that Bess really loves Jack, so he steps aside in favor of his rival after having extracted a promise from him that he will drink no more.

Little Sunbeam — Balboa — (Three Reels)—The village blacksmith adopts Little Sunbeam and her sister. The sister meets a stranger from the city, who exercises an influence over her which Little Sunbeam instinctively recognizes as an evil one. The blacksmith's daughter had eloped with a stranger some years before, and this seems to be what the stranger is planning with the innocent sister. Such proves to be the case. Little Sunbeam goes to the city in search of her sister. The man who took her from her home has cast her off. The boarding house in which the searcher lives is next door to the house in which the blacksmith's daughter is living. Little Sunbeam plays on her violin, and the old songs influence the erring girl next door to go home. Eventually she finds her sister while posing for an artist, who has fallen in love with her.

Eclectic

When Fate Was Kind. — Eclectic (Three Reels)—Joel Lang, to avenge himself on Edwin Forbes, decides to use Stella Le Roy, a girl whose shady past he knows, as a means to separate Forbes and his wife. Forbes' brother, Billy, asks him for money to settle his gambling debts, but is refused as it is not the first time h has appealed to his brother. Lang arranges to excite Mrs. Forbes' jealousy when he asks Stella and him to meet at a dance, and sees that they are in each other's company most of the time. The next day, Lang compels Stella to make a loan from Forbes, which she does. Billy, however, steals the check and substitutes a business prospectus in the envelope. Lang manages to secure the envelope and takes it to Mrs. Forbes, who confronts her husband with it. When its contents are disclosed, however, Lang is forced to go away as he has failed in his attempt to separate the Forbes. Billy is conscience stricken and returns the check to his brother, at the same time telling him that he has fallen in love with Stella and is going to marry her.

Whiffles Wins the Winsome—Pathe (Split Reel).—Something over five hundred feet of comedy interprets the new romance of Whiffles, the balance of the reel being taken up with educational views of Colombo, the capital city of Ceylon. Whiffles' work necessitates his calling up the gas office quite often, and at last he becomes inquisitive about the owner of the cute voice that answers him. He makes a date with her, as he thinks, but instead it is with one of the old-maid employes who takes up the receiver when the young girl is called from the office. Whiffles' romance is almost blasted by the complications which result, but, after much hard work, he manages to pour his story into the pretty girl's ear, and is rewarded by her consent to marry him. C. R. C.

The Police Dog—Pathe (Split Reel).—This is an unusually funny story told by J. R. Bray's animated cartoons. It is a play on the present system of using police dogs on patrol duty, and sets forth one of the catastrophes that might happen should a Thomas cat accidentally stroll within the canine policeman's line of vision. The cartoonist's work takes up about six or seven hundred feet, and is all too short at that, though the subject completing the reel, "The Friend of the Birds," is a highly educational and interesting one. C. R. C.

The Quality of Mercy.—Eclectic—(Two Reels).—Dr. Paul Deval is in love with Suzanne Malinaison, the daughter of a wealthy man. Her father contemplates marrying her to a friend of his, and Deval, acting at the girl's suggestion, asks for her hand, but is refused. That night Suzanne steals from her home and goes to the cottage of her lover, who persuades his mother to stay with them, and the next morning Malinaison comes to the house in rage and accuses Deval of abducting his daughter. He shoots the physician and Deval's mother sends for the police. The young doctor, however, saves his sweetheart's father by destroying the evidence of his guilt, and the father, in gratitude, agrees to his marriage with Suzanne.

The Runaway Leopard.—Eclectic—A leopard tamer gives one of his pets to a scientist friend and the beast escapes from his cage. In turn an artist's studio and a military shop are visited by the leopard. Numerous persons passing along the street, including a boy carrying a live checken, are frightened by it. Eventually the old master sees the leopard raising havoc on the street and takes him home. On the same reel is an interesting educational, showing certain snakes which are formidable in looks only, entitled, "Some Non-Poisonous Snakes."

Max and the Fair M. D.—Eclectic—Max discovers that a charming young woman doctor lives in the same apartment house as he does and feigns sickness to meet her. All goes well and soon they are married. Directly after their wedding, she is called away on a case, and returns only to again be called to see some patients. The unhappy bride-groom protests in vain, but one call too many comes, and he throws the servant, who brings the message, out the door and locks his bride in. A year later he wanders into his wife's office with their baby, and sees his wife with her head against a man's chest listening to the beating of his heart. Enraged, he drives all the male patients out of the place and insists that his wife forget that is an "M. D." and become a real wife and mother.

General Special

Under the Gaslight—Biograph, Klaw & Erlanger (Four Reels).—Judas, a servant, is discharged by the Courtland family and she substitutes her baby girl for their little daughter. Later the Courtlands adopt their own child, thinking it to be a girl of the slums. Twenty years pass and Laura, their own child, is in love with Ray, as is Pearl, Judas' daughter. When Judas' husband tries to blackmail Laura, Pearl sees a chance to separate Laura and Ray, which she uses to her own advantage. Laura is snubbed by the society set, and becoming despondent, leaves her entire fortune to Pearl and runs away. Judas and her husband kidnap Laura from her boarding house, but she is saved by Ray and Snorky, an ex-soldier, after a fight in the thieves' den near the river, in which Judas' husband is killed. Judas shatters Pearl's dream of the future by telling him that she is really a girl of the slums and Laura comes into her own. She is reunited to Ray and in her own presence she forgives her adopted sister. Judas goes away forever.

In the Days of the Thundering Herd—Selig—(Five Reels)—November 30.—A story showing the hardships encountered by pioneer settlers of the West and featuring an immense herd of buffaloes. A thrilling Indian-settler battle forms one of the incidents. A complete review will be found on page 732 of the November 28th MOTOGRAPHY.

The Spy's Fate — LUBIN — (THREE REELS). — The Amalgamated Smelting Company, supported by the U. S. government, brings suit to recover damages done by the rebels in a foreign country and as envoy to the arbitration commission who meet at Bar Harbor, Frederick Thurston is opposed by Henri Sutro, who represents the foreigners. Sutro enlists the services of Jean Thiers and Madame LaRoche, detectives, and Thurston secures Jack Maher and Mary Joyce, secret service agents. A battle of wits takes place, as the foreigners are determined to secure the American documents by fair or foul means. Madame LaRoche and Thurston fall in love. Thiers secures the papers and when he sees the infatuation of his partner and the American man, tries to persuade her to return to Brussels with him, but she refuses. Maher finds out that Thiers has secured the papers and almost succeeds in getting them, but fails. Thurston attacks Thiers, but is vanquished and thrown into a vault and a water-faucet turned on. Madame LaRoche kills Thiers and secures the papers, rushes back in time to save Thurston from drowning, and he in turn manages to deliver the papers to the arbitration room in time to settle the affair peaceably.

The Straight Road—FAMOUS PLAYERS (FOUR REELS)—Moll O'Hara interests Ruth Thompson, a settlement worker, and with her fiance's help she tries to reform the girl. The fiance is a worthless fellow, however, and Moll exposes him. Her tenement lover thrashes Ruth's fiance at the same time, and it looks as though Moll would have to remain in the old life, but all turns out right in the end. A complete review will be found on page —of the issue of November 28.

Aristocracy—FAMOUS PLAYERS—(FOUR REELS).—The Stocktons of the West are wealthy and the Lawrences of the East are aristocratic. When the children of the two families become engaged their social differences appear. After many complications things are finally straightened out. A review will be found on page 770 of this issue.

The Country Mouse — BOSWORTH — (FOUR REELS)—NOVEMBER 24.—Billy Balderson, though rough in his ways, has a wonderful brain, while his wife Addie can do nothing but cook and admire her husband. When a smooth "gent" tries to deceive his neighbors, Billy takes up their cause and in the argument which follows on the meeting platform, makes use of his wonderful power to control any situation. He is nominated for legislature and goes with Addie to the state capitol. Billy quickly adapts himself to the society conditions there, but Addie is not so fortunate, and is laughed at by the society people. Marshall, the man who tried to deceive the farmers, and his wife Myrtle take the Baldersons in charge, and Myrtle devotes much of her time to Billy. Addie determines to prove to her husband that she also can become transformed, and after a trip to the beauty parlor, becomes a brilliantly dressed scoiety belle. Marshall spends a great deal of his time with her trying to influence Billy's vote on a coming railroad deal, and Billy becomes jealous. In the end all turns out happily and Addie begins to teach her husband how to tango.

Mrs. Black Is Back—FAMOUS PLAYERS —(FOUR REELS)—Mrs. Black, an ex-widow, tells her newly made husband, Professor Black, that she is twenty-nine instead of thirty-six years old, and that her son is six years, when in reality he is a husky college boy of seventeen winters, who has a private valet. Mrs. Black attempts to reduce her weight in a physical culture school and runs up a large bill thereby. Her Johnny's poker bills also draw on Professor Black's income, though he does not know it. She sends the money which her husband gave her to pay her physical culture bill, to her son and he loses all of it in a poker game and also gives an I. O. U. to a Spaniard, who comes direct to Mrs. Black to collect it. The physical culture teacher also tries to collect and Mrs. Black is kept busy trying to dodge them. Her troubles are added to when her son announces that he is going to marry a girl and bring her home. Her son arrives with his valet and he and Mrs. Black are kept busy trying to make matters appear right to the professor, who has declared that he hates a person who does not tell the truth. When she is found out she jumps into an auto and rides away. The auto is wrecked and Professor Black forgets all his other troubles in the fear that she is seriously hurt. However, when he finds that she is still alive he forgives everything and welcomes her son.

Sawyer

The Tyranny of the Mad Czar—SAWYER—(FOUR REELS).—This subject deals with the accession to the throne of Russia in 1796 of Paul the First, son of Catherine, and his subsequent meteoric career which ended in his assassination in 1801. Throughout the film the character of the Czar is carefully drawn and the many peculiarities for which he was noted are vividly portrayed. Count Pahlen, chief of police of St. Petersburg, was the arch conspirator in the Czar's overthrow. He gathered about him a cabal of officers representing the various corps in the service and disseminated among them the seed which later found fruit in the Czar's assassination. The clever manner in which the count succeeded in inveigling Prince Alexander into the plot against his father is depicted. The love of the Countess Anna for the Mad Czar and her wonderful influence over the mad man furnishes a deep tragic and sympathetic throb for his misfortunes.

The Lady of Lyons—PHOENIX—(FIVE PARTS)—This story adapted from the original work by Edward Lytton Bulwer. Claude Melnotte, the talented son of a gardner, falls in love with Pauline, the haughty daughter of his father's former master. He gives her flowers and writes poems about her anonymously, but when she discovers who it is she scornfully rjeects him. Citizen Beauseant is also rejected by Pauline because he lacks a title. Beauseant proposes to Claude that he pose as the Prince of Como and induce Pauline to wed him because of his title. Claude agrees and the plan works perfectly, despite the suspicions of Colonel Damas whom Claude worsts in a duel. He brings Pauline to his poor home and she is overcome by the discovery. He is thoroughly penitent of what he has done and decides to go away to war. Beauseant calls upon Pauline to take her away, but she says she really loves her husband. The citizen attempts to force his attention upon her but Claude rescues her. He then goes away and is heard of no more for two and one-half years, during which time he wins fame for his heroism in the army. He returns a colonel, only to hear that Pauline is about to wed Beauseant to save her father from financial ruin.

Universal Special

The Master Key—UNIVERSAL—(TWO REELS)—NOVEMBER 30.—The third episode of this serial begins with Wilkerson's compelling Gallon to employ him as superintendent of the mine. Shortly afterwards Gallon dies. His will names his daughter, Ruth, as heiress to the mine, and appoints John Dore as her guardian. Dore is given a letter, on the envelope of which is a written command not to open the letter until Ruth's eighteenth birthday, unless her welfare is threatened. The miners revolt against Wilkerson's domineering manner and Dore, interceding for them, is discharged. The miners strike at this, and demand that Dore be re-instated. Wilkerson's better judgment overcomes his hatred for the man, and he re-instates him in his old position of mining engineer.

Warners

"A Taste of High Life" — Denis O'Neill is a trench digger in New York. In Ireland is another Denis O'Neill, the son of a wealthy baronet. The baronet disowns his son when the latter declares that he intends to marry Nora Keene, a country girl. Denis goes to America to seek his fortune. Penniless, he is compelled to take lodging in the very tenement in which the other Denis O'Neill lives. The old baronet dies and leaves his wealth and title to his son. By mistake, the inheritance goes to the wrong Denis O'Neill, who is not at all averse to accepting it. He at once takes to high life. One morning he awakens with an awful headache to be confronted by the stern fact that he has been using another man's money and title. Back to the shovel goes this Denis O'Neill and the other one weds his Nora.

The Price He Paid—Humanology—(Five Reels).—The man neglects his wife to court the society girl but the price he pays atones for his act. Adapted from Ella Wheeler Wilcox's poem. Complete review will be found on page — of this issue.

Noisy Neighbors—Warners.—Si and Fritz were neighborly neighbors until Si installed a gaudy, raucous rooster in his backyard, and then trouble began. Fritz, finding his slumber disturbed of mornings, bought a big base drum, and had his daughter Lena beat it beneath Si's window. Si, angered at receiving a taste of his own medicine, had his son cut a hole in the drum, but Fritz, catching him at it, forced him into the body of the drum and sets it adrift. But still the rooster crows of mornings, and so Fritz resorts to dynamite. He blows up the rooster. The upshot of the feud is a thirty-day sentence in jail for both, and this gives them ample time to meditate upon the folly of being anything but good neighbors.

World

Lola—Shubert (Five Reels).—Lola's father is heartbroken when his daughter is killed. His scientist friend has perfected a machine whereby life can be restored to a person, without returning the soul, and he asks him for aid. Together they attempt the important experiment and Lola is brought back to life, but she is no longer the sweet and generous girl she was, but rather selfish and unfaithful. She throws over her lover, neglects her father and follows in the path of riches. In time she is told by a doctor that any day she might die of heart failure. She returns to her father, but is not repentant and tells him that when she dies she must get another lease of life, as he had restored her to this state before. When the girl dies, the scientist again wishes to apply his discovery for medical purposes, but the father, heartbroken at the result of the first experiment, dashes the machine to the floor, taking away the last opportunity his daughter has for life and shattering the life work of his friend.

Miscellaneous

Jane Eyre—Whitman (Four Reels).—This is a picturization of the world-famous novel by Charlotte Bronte. Jane Eyre, a tutor in the home of Edward Fairfax Rochester, whose wife became insane after the birth of their first child, is coveted by Rochester, who plans to secretly marry Jane without disclosing to her the fact that he has a wife living. The insane wife learns of the state of her husband's affections and with maniacal cunning succeeds in burning down the Rochester mansion, but herself perishes in the flames, thus leaving the way clear to an honorable union between Jane Eyre and Mr. Rochester.

Strand War Series (No. 10)—Strand.—The Fall of Ostend. Lady Dorothy Fielding arrives at Ostend to join the British Red Cross. German shells bursting over Ostend. The Belgian dog-drawn mitrailleuse leaving for the field of action. Wounded Belgians arriving from the battlefield attended by priests. Belgian troops and inhabitants of Ostend leaving the stricken city. On their way to Dunkirk. Refugees boarding train.

The Witness Invisible—Blinkhorn (Three Reels)—George Neville, son of an eminent professor of medicine, is reminded by Hedda, a former sweetheart, of his promise to create a sensation on her behalf by making magnificent artificial diamonds, and thus gain for her tremendous publicity. A jealous rival seeks to frustrate the plan, but cannot be certain of Neville's identity, as he always wears a black mask when going to and from the theater. A secret camera is therefore installed, and this invisible witness takes pictures of a terrible accident —some of which give the true state of things, while others seem proof that Neville is the murderer of Hedda. Neville's father is terribly upset, and is forced to bellieve his son guilty, and hands him over to the police. But the shrewd police, unconvinced of George's guilt, begin an investigation on their own account, with eminently satisfactory results.

Strand War Series (No. 11)—Strand.—Railroad trains and bridges across the River Lys destroyed by mines. Belgians at Vosges guarding against an attack by German Zeppelins. Algerian troops arriving at Nieuport. French reserves of 1916 being mustered into the army. Refugees from Ostend being supplied with food. Building at Slype, used by German staff as headquarters, set afire by shell from British battleship. Soldiers recovering bodies from the ruins at Slype. Ruins of a German aeroplane brought to earth by a shot from a Belgian gun. Belgian artillery passing through the village Courteoi. Belgian infantry on the outskirts of Courteoi. Belgian artillery preparing to meet the enemy near La Basses. Belgian Red Cross, removing wounded soldiers from Folkestone. Prisoners of war.

The Vanishing Cinderella—Holland. In this one reel picture Miss Fealey plays the role of a young lady reporter and, judging from the work done on her one assignment she is sure to rise to the front rank of her profession. Tom MacEvoy and George Pierce are featured in this production and are ably assisted by George Drew, Rose Koch, Kate Griffith and Sandy Chapman.

The Charlotte Street Mystery—Great Northern (Three Reels).—Count Warden at an auction sale purchases a jewelled ornament, much coveted by Davidoff, an adventurer, and Kate Meredith, his associate. Kate obtains a position as nurse to the children of Detective Barker, and Davidoff secures an apartment next door to Barker's and cuts a passage between Kate's room and this apartment, then calling upon the Countess Warden, he explains that a friend of his has an ornament similar to the one she purchased, which perhaps she might like to secure. He then gives her Kate's address. The countess calls upon Kate and the latter gets her to handle some needle work in which a poisoned needle is concealed. The countess becomes unconscious and Kate dons her clothing, and returns to the countess' home where she steals the jewels. When the countess recovers and returns home, she discovers the robbery, and summons Detective Barker. He is lead by various clues to suspect Kate, but investigating her apartment, is also priced by the poisoned needle, and ere he recovers consciousness, Kate and Davidoff have fled. He chases them, but they manage to elude him in various exciting fashions, and finally depart apoard an out-going steamer. Securing a motor boat, Barker follows, overtakes the steamer, and arrests the fugitives.

The Woman He Wronged — Apex (Four Reels).—Baron Rothschild orders his son George to Paris on account of a love affair he has had with Helen Holt, the miller's daughter. A child is born to Helen and the baron has another family adopt it, telling Helen it died immediately after birth. Count George marries Princess Louise Turner, and after the baron's death returns to take possession of his estate. Lieutenant Berloff is sent to a district near the estate as a spy for his country, which is on the verge of war. He encounters the countess, who is his old sweetheart, and they hold clandestine meetings daily. She helps him get the plans from the army of her husband's country, which is in a nearby camp. Incidents follow in rapid succession, which lead up to the pursuit of the countess and Berloff, who take refuge in a ship, the discovery by George that his child still lives, his meeting with Helen, the death of the countess and Berloff when the ship is blown up, and the subsequent reuniting of Helen, George, and her child.

The Aviator Traitor — Blinkhorn (Three Reels).—William Horner, an ex-aviator, endeavors to steal the plans for a new high-powered aeroplane made for Government Aviator Stewart. Gertrude Martin is proprietor of the Martin Auto and Aero Company, by whom Stewart is employed, and who are making the machine. Horner is Gertrude's cousin and manages to secure the plans after Stewart refuses a bribe. He takes a train and Stewart pursues in his aeroplane. He lights on the roof of the train, uncouples the car in which Horner is riding and regains the plans. He then takes them back to Gertrude, and they then discover that they are more than employer and employee to each other. During the course of the photodrama numerous views of the uses to which an areoplane may be put in modern warfare are shown.

The Suicide Club — APEX — (THREE REELS).—Prince Florizel is ready for any mad freak in order to vary the monotony of his existence, so when Colonel Geraldine to whom he is introduced by a young man suggests visiting the "Suicide Club" he agrees and they go to an underground apartment, where a number of men are seated around a table drawing cards to see which one will be killed and which one of the number will kill him. At first he thinks it is a joke but when he sees the result he is horrified. At the next meeting the prince himself is doomed but is rescued by Geraldine. He sends a message to the president saying he will not betray his secret but insists that he shall accompany the colonel's son to Paris and that one of them must die. In Paris the president's accomplice, a beautiful woman, lures the younger Geraldine to his death. The prince determines to give the president no quarters on account of this act and at the next meeting of the club the president is doomed to die and the prince selected as the one to kill him. The president attempts to escape, but the lights are flashed out and the prince slays him. He then politely bows his way out the door.

Children of the Jungle—E. & R. JUNGLE FILM.—A young scientist searching for animals in the jungle becomes acquainted with an old man and his daughter. The girl has been raised in the jungle and her father is the only man she has ever known. Her knowledge of the beasts and the young man's interest in them leads to friendship which culminates in their marriage. They are cared for by a tribe of savages, but one day the savages leave them on an uninhabited island and put out to sea. The three white people left alone on the island become acquainted with a strange person, half man and half ape, who has a pet chimpanzee. Two years later while the mother is away from her child's bed the chimpanzee steals it and bestows on it almost human devotion. It is only through the powers of the ape-man that the baby is rescued. Signal fires attract a ship and a few days later the white people sail away, while the ape-man remains behind.

The Last Dance—PICTURE PLAYHOUSE —(FIVE REELS).—Jean a poor struggling artist falls madly in love with Conchita a famous dancer, but he can never meet her off the stage. His model Ninon encourages him in his efforts but he cannot achieve success. On the night of her greatest triumph Conchita wears the flower sent her by Jean and later Ninon persuades her to pose just once for the artist that he may paint her portrait and gain undying fame. She comes to the studio while he is asleep and dances before him; then she kisses him and leaves and the picture he paints from the inspiration, receives the highest award at the academy. Jean becomes famous over night but a life of dissipation follows for both Conchita and Jean. Broken in health he returns to the home of the faithful Ninon and on his deathbed he is again visited by Conchita who dances for him before he dies in her arms. As life holds nothing more for her she follows him into the unknown.

Thirty Leagues Under the Sea—WILLIAMSON.—A submarine film taken by the Williamson brothers, showing under water views of the many strange fishes of the tropical Atlantic ocean; also a fight between a man and a man-eating shark; a deep sea diver exploring a wreck; native Bahama boys diving for coins; famous submarine gardens in the West Indies; a forest under the sea and numerous other views, which are seen for the first time on the screen.

Through the Valley of Shadows—HEYWORTH-AMERICAN (FOUR REELS).—Florence Turner renews her popularity in this drama, which affords her unusual opportunities for strong emotional work in a difficult part. At the opening of the story Miss Turner appears as a winsome, charitable young woman, and a few years later, as a worn-out, wretched creature, embittered against life, who is filled with a frenzy for revenge when the cause of her unhappiness and impoverishment is placed in her power. Dr. Cross' absorption in his work deprives his wife of the attention due her, and she naturally seeks sociability wherever she can find it. This leads to a misunderstanding, and the young wife, Alice, leaves home. Years later we see her, a wreck of her former self, about to commit suiside. A young woman stops her, and scures her a place in a moving picture company. Here she again meets Mailling, the man who was the direct cause of her trouble, and stabs him while enacting a supposed murder scene. Dr. Cross is called on the case, and saves the man's life. A happy reunion takes place when he meets the "murderer," and they bury the past in anticipations of the future. C. R. C.

For Home and Country—COSMOFOTOFILM (TWO REELS) NOVEMBER —.—Before leaving for war, Lieutenant Ashby asks for the hand of Ruth Pendleton, the vicar's daughter, and, though the girl is willing, her father refuses as he does not believe in war or soldiers. When the army attacks their native village and both Pendleton and his daughter are subject to their insults, the vicar himself bears arms against them. When death seems imminent to him and Ruth, Ashby and his troops arrive and save them. After a skirmish, Ashby again returns to the front and joins the main body of his country's troops in a fierce two days' battle, returning victorious. After the war, the lieutenant returns to again court Ruth and this time he finds that the vicar no longer objects to him, as he has discovered a new significance in a biblical assertion that "The Lord is a Man of War."

Strand War Series, No. 13—STRAND.—The bombardment of Ghent. The battlefield of Tournai. Australian troops leaving Sydney, Australia. Decorating the commander, Colonel Watson. Types of army Medical and Transport Corps. The last farewell before embarking. Nuns arriving in Bruges after fleeing from Melle.

Press Agent Says

That Ben Turpin, the Essanay comedian, courts all the bumps and knocks he can get. "It means money to me," says Turpin, "Everytime I get smashed out of shape, I am just so much more valuable for my oddity. I was born peculiar looking, and after I had my teeth knocked out and my head pushed out of shape, I began to look like a caricature. I can't walk along the street without some one laughing at me. I should worry. That's what brings me my 'ham and.'"

That poor little Toby is dead and that blankets and blankets of gloom have temporarily shrouded Mary Fuller's happiness. Her dearly beloved doggy has gone and died. Miss Fuller really loved the dog, Toby. She had brought him back with her from the country and a horrible hotel clerk had informed her that she must "take that dog somewhere else." She cried a little, and then put the dog in a private kennel. The dog, unused to the strange surroundings, refused to eat, but spent the days whining for his mistress. Gradually the little animal became weaker, until he just lay down and slowly passed away.

That William Pike, one of the actors who have helped film the story of "Salomy Jane" for the California Motion Picture Corporation thinks that actually hanging a man is a step too far in the direction of "movie" realism. At that, he may be right.

That Harold MacGrath, the noted author, who wrote "Adventures of Kathlyn," has written Miss Williams, expressing the hope that he may have the opportunity of preparing another screen story for her in the near future.

That Margaret Joslin, the well known "Sophie Clutts" in the western Essanay "Snakeville" comedies, is now the proud owner of a handsome machine given her by her husband, Harry Todd, for a birthday present. She allows her husband to use it, but when the two go for a spin, it is noted that she is always at the wheel. The clever woman is rapidly becoming adept at driving the car.

That Lee Morris escaped from the Selig Jungle-Zoo a few days ago, but has been brought back again. Lee is a comedian and ran away from good cause. A comedy called for the Morris leg in a bear trap. Lee entered the set for rehearsal and began to tread towards the trap. The affair looked rather genuine to him and he paused to investigate. He discovered that some intelligent property man had planted a real bear trap, large enough to hold a grizzly. It sat with mouth open waiting for his leg. With a yell the nervous Morris person fled the scene and had to be persuaded back after the dangerous contraption had been eliminated.

That J. Barney Sherry, the popular veteran character actor of Thomas Ince's New York-Mutual Company, is a comedian. This is well established with those who know Mr. Sherry intimately, but to those who don't it must become known through association. Mr. Sherry isn't funny by reason of any slap-stick activities in or about Inceville, but he is funny because he has the asset of ability to grasp a situation and create a laugh with a word.

That in staging one of his big scenes for "The Clansman," D. W. Griffith, the Mutual's $100,000 a year director, proved that he could ride an unruly horse with as much ease as a professional cowpuncher.

That Violet Mersereau, the charming Imp leading woman, came home the other night and skipped lightly down the corridor in her apartment where she lives with her widowed mother and sister Claire. Nearing the dining room she stopped suddenly, for there she heard a strange noise. She knew that her mother and sister had gone out. The little actress was just about to turn and flee in terror when a tall, handsome man stepped out and confronted her. It proved to be her brother, who had been in Canada for the past six years.

That John Cossar of the Essanay stock company narrowly escaped getting a good beating recently while taking some exterior scenes for "The Fable of One Samaritan Who Got Paralysis of the Helping Hand." He was made up as a laborer and was violently beating Thomas Commerford, when a burly fireman jumped off a street car and stepped between the two, threatening to whip Cossar for mistreating the old man. Not until the bystanders began to laugh did the fireman realize his mistake, but he admitted the joke was on himself.

That on account of the breathless interest in the world's baseball series, the war in Europe, and it being the anniversary of Columbus discovering America, Victor Potel, "Slippery Slim" of Essanay "Snakeville" fame, all but forgot that it was his birthday on October 12 until five minutes before midnight. However he immediately proceeded to celebrate, and you know you can do a lot in five minutes. Next day on being asked how he felt, Victor merely and meekly answered, "Well, boys (and then brushing his hand across his brow), too many big events in one day."

The Third Screen Club Ball

A Tremendous Success

A RAINBOW splashed its Thanksgiving eve allurement of tone and tint over the gold ballroom of the Hotel Astor—and they called it the third annual ball of the Screen Club.

It was an event, the dominant note of which was "members and friends of the Screen Club all are we." It swayed to the rhythm of orchestral time, thrilled to the demonstration of men's liking for a man—as exemplified by the club members' presentation to King Baggot of a life membership in the club he founded. The jollification of the Screeners ended in the dawn of a bright Thanksgiving and a knowledge that this, of all film events, had been quite the best and nicest.

In the lobby which led to the ballroom there was offered by a guard in Puritanical costume, a proclamation on brown paper decorated with a red seal. It had to do with the whys and wherefores of the third annual ball and a favor that met with appreciation by the women was a dull gold brooch decorated with the Screen Club's insignia of green enamel and intertwining letters.

The popularity of dance-floor and box-tier, of supper-room, parlors and smoking-veranda bespoke a large attendance. And the grand march, which led its serpentine way amid a colorful tangle of light effects, a credit to the ingenuity of Mr. Smith of the Nicholas Power Company, was not a complete index of the guests, as the various rooms off the ballroom all held a goodly number at the same time the march was in progress.

Mary Pickford, in a white lacy gown of semi-transparency, scalloped in silk of a delicate blue and pink, and with a narrow ribbon of palest blue holding her curls in place, led the procession with the Screen Club's president, James Kirkwood. It was shortly afterward that the club's presentation to King Baggot was made. It was a surprise, entire and overwhelming, to the former president of the club. Mr. Kirkwood made the speech of presentation. In a few words he expressed the appreciation of the club for the three years' work of Mr. Baggot, but more especially for the worth of the man himself. The gift, which is no small one, as a life membership in the Screen Club has assumed the proportion of the sum of $250, was given the form of a gold card of membership. On one side was engraved "King Baggot, founder and first president the Screen Club. Thanksgiving eve, 1914." The other bears the quotation from "Hamlet":

The beginning of the grand march at the Screen Club Ball.

A combination and a form indeed
Where every god did seem to set his seal
To give the world assurance of a man.

Mr. Baggot's response was brief and unmistakably expressive of his surprise and deep feeling. He had been summoned to the ballroom by a message which said that somebody was ill. He faced the evening's many guests and the presentation that was significant of the fact that he counts his Screen Club friends by the enumeration of the club's members.

The orchestra was faithful to the last departure of guests—somewhere about 4:30 o'clock—when many went to the home of the club in Forty-seventh street for breakfast. But all shared in the decision that the third annual ball of the Screeners was decidedly the greatest of Screen Club triumphs.

SCREEN CLUB SCRIBBLES.

Jules Burnstein as manager of the sale of boxes, Jake Gerhardt as chairman of the ball committee and Ben Wilson, as vice-president and head of the house committee, are said to be the threesome most directly responsible for the smoothness of every arrangement.

George Blaisdell, treasurer of the club, had much to do toward making the event the big one it was, but makes the statement "'It was harmony of members that counted." He is responsible for the wording of the Puritanical proclamation and also for the choice of inscription on Mr. Baggot's life membership card.

That James Kirkwood has the deep respect and liking of the club's every member, is evidenced at every opportunity. He is a fit successor to King Baggot.

"Bill" Barry, corresponding secretary, Arthur Leslie, press correspondent, "Doc" Willatt and Charles O. Baumann, second and third vice-presidents, and Paul Scardon, recording secretary, all had much to do with the success of the evening.

And success it was socially, of course; financially, to the extent of enlarging the club's bank account by between $2,500 and $3,500! And the Astor management expressed the hope that the hotel be favored with another Screen Club party.

The gowns worn added much to the splendor and dignity of the event. They were an expression of beauty and a right-up-to-the-clock-tick display of modishness.

Pearl White's was one entirely of sequins and was especially stunning. Anne Luther with her red-gold hair was beautiful in black and midnight blue chiffon. Rosemary Theby was in crimson from pumps to neck-scarf of tulle.

Lottie Briscoe was sweetly quaint in a full-skirted dress of pink silk taffeta and with it she wore short black silk mitts. Florence Hackett was one of the several who wore black and who wore it well. Helen Gardner's gown was also black. Cissy Fitz-Gerald could be distinguished at any distance by reason of her head-dress of aigrettes and Barbara Tennant thoughtfully allowed her long-trained gown to trip nobody.

"Pop" Lubin had more fox-trots to his credit at the close of the dancing evening then many younger men and Mrs. Lubin enjoyed that part of the program as much as he. Mrs. Ira M. Lowry, their daughter, missed not a dance.

Daniel Frohman made a discriminate selection of partners, among whom were Mary Pickford and Hazel Dawn.

Joe Farnham watched the fun from the right-hand corner of a right-hand box and as his smile was as usually big, he evidently enjoyed the dance as much as the dancers.

W. T. Rock was in the grand march, but left the more energetic dancing of the evening to S. M. Spedon, who fulfilled this obligation with credit.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph W. Smiley were among the evening's guests and others from Lubinville were Earl Metcalf, Daisy Evans, and Ormi Hawley.

Arthur Johnson overcame his own scruples against attending dances and came voluntarily.

Kate Price, contrary to custom was not present and there were many queries of Mary Charleson as to Miss Price's state of health. "Well, quite well," was Miss Mary's answer regarding the genial Kate.

Box number 33 at the southeast corner of the gold room was the stronghold of the Excelsior and Favorite Player companies, and all who passed within reach were given a jovial welcome by Messrs. Rosenbach and Blackwell.

Paul Panzer and Tefft Johnson presided over the door during the early part of the evening, and later might have been seen making themselves useful on the dance-floor where Charles Seay, Arthur Leslie, George Blaisdell, and Jules Bernstein were seeing that the grand-marchers separated, paired, met again, etc., as per the prescription.

Among the many who represented the Edison company, were Mabel Trunnelle and Herbert Prior, Bessie Bannon, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Earl, Bessie Learn, Gladys Hulette, Viola Dana, Andy Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Seay, Director Ridgley, Dick Tucker, Edward O'Connor, Arthur Houseman, Sally Crute, Mr. Eytinge, Gertrude McCoy, Mr. Plympton, Jr. and Frank A. Bannon.

Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Zukor entertained a number of guests in the Famous Players' box.

Dr. Edward Jones and Dr. Schallenberger discussed politics and other subjects with guests in the rear of the Thanhouser box. The Harry Benhams who came in from New Rochelle on a flat tire also had access to this box, as did Jean Darnell, stunning in white and a welcome sight to the many who have missed her, during the last year.

Billy Garwood can't think of any possible thing that would ever again induce him to leave New York.

Leah Baird made an appearance toward the last of the evening and received happiness wishes on the marriage she had contracted but a few hours previous.

"Tony" Kelly took two girl friends in a taxi from clubhouse to hotel Astor and forgot to dismiss the car. When it occurred to him he hurried out and found the bill was $8.10.

Roland Blaisdell, at 6:45 a. m. Thursday coming out of the club reprimanded a newsboy who tried to sell him a Thursday morning's paper instead of a Sunday. As the boy walked off mumbling, the prospective buyer "came to."

In the World Film box could be found Mr. and Mrs. Lewis J. Selznick, Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Sobel, Mr. and Mrs. G. J. Gerhoff, H. Algal, Miss Florence Eisman, M. E. Hoffman, J. E. Brulatour, James Young, Clara Kimball Young, H. H. Dean, G. N. Busch, and Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Wilk.

The boxholders were Mark Dintenfass, the Vitagraph Company, Thanhouser, Ben Wilson, Universal, J. Searle Dawley, Edison, Nicolas Power, Moving Picture World, Fred Poppa, Anthony Kelly and Hugh Hoffman, World Film Corporation, K. & C. Booking, Miss Helen Gardner and Charles Gaskill, King Baggot, Jule Burnstein and Alan Hale, William Fox, Frank Tichenor, Adolph Zukor, James Kirkwood, M. J. Shear of Solax, Romaine Felding, Tiffany Corporation, Jesse L. Lasky, All Star, Lubin, Alco, Excelsior and Favorite Players, O. A. C. Lund, Alex Francis and George Powl; Alliance, Peerless, New York Motion Picture Company.

In the Vitagraph box were Earle Williams, Cissy Fitz-Gerald, Mr. and Mrs. Tefft Johnson, Helen Gardner, Charles Gaskill, Ethel Lloyd, Donald Hall, Nita Frazier, Ned Finley, Wally Van, Nicholas Dunaew, Paul Scardon, Leah Baird, Billy Quirk, Lee Beggs, George Baker, Mrs. Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. Vic Smith, Mr. and Mrs. William T. Rock, S. M. Spedon, Edward Thomas, Charles Chapman, James Morrison, Edith Storey, Lionel Belmore, Mary Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Morey, Frank Bunny and Dick Leslie.

"The Girl From Thunder Mountain"

Kentucky's mother arrives.

THAT beauty, wit and refinement may exist in one born amid the most humble surroundings, that a society bud may bloom amid squalor and filth, and that life and ambition may overcome all obstacles, seems to be convincingly proven in Essanay's two-reel feature entitled "The Girl From Thunder Mountain," which is booked for release on Friday, December 18.

Ruth Stonehouse, in the role of Kentucky, daughter of "Old Tom" Floyd, a Virginia mountaineer, has one of the best parts she has been given in some time and will more than ever endear herself to the picture going public. Richard C. Travers has the leading male role, opposite Miss Stonehouse, and as usual appears to advantage in every scene.

Scenes of squalor and filth in the home of "Old Tom" Floyd back in the Virginia mountains greet our eyes as the picture begins on the screen, and one learns that Lawrence Bartlett, a civil engineer surveying in the Virginia mountains is thoroughly disgusted with the people with whom he is compelled to associate during his work in that locality.

Bartlett, mistaken by Floyd for a government man, is about to be shot when Floyd's daughter Kentucky suddenly appears and induces her father to at least take Bartlett to the cabin and question him further. Floyd, accordingly, escorts the surveyor to his humble cabin, and there has many of his suspicions set at rest as to Bartlett's business in the locality.

A few days later in New York Bartlett dines with Mr. and Mrs. Wentworth, former Virginians now wealthy. Discussing affairs in a tete-a-tete with Mrs. Wentworth, he expresses his surprise at the ignorance and general filthiness of the Virginia people whom he met, particularly the women. Mrs. Wentworth at once takes up the gauntlet and declares that all Virginia women have good blood in their veins and with a little training could become celebrities in any social set. The argument grows warmer and Bartlett finally dares Mrs. Wentworth to bring one of these mountaineer women to New York and try to force her into society. Laughingly Mrs. Wentworth accepts his dare and promises a new social light.

Bartlett returns from Kentucky.

Some weeks later the picture shows Mrs. Wentworth motoring in Virginia, and when her car is halted by an accident, she chances to be near the Floyd cabin, and is taken there and shown many kindnesses. Meeting Kentucky, she takes a great liking to the girl and finally offers to bring her to New York and educate her, a proposition which Floyd finally agrees to.

Kentucky "rehearses" for the benefit of the family.

With the passing of months, Kentucky develops from a rough, uncouth and ragged, dirty waif of the mountains into a beautiful, refined and decidedly winsome society bud. When Mrs. Wentworth is positive that Kentucky has reached a point where she will be the social equal of any persons she may meet at social gatherings, she 'phones Bartlett to call, and the young civil engineer, visiting the Wentworth home is amazed by the beauty and grace of the new debutante.

As the weeks flit by, Bartlett acknowledges to himself that he is in love with the girl. One day Kentucky encounters her mother, who has come to New York to see her. Mrs. Floyd is still the haggard, dirty and uncouth mountain woman that she was when Bartlett first saw her in the Virginia mountains and, not recognizing her, he supposes her to be some servant in the house.

Kentucky hears Bartlett tell Mrs. Wentworth of the strange "filthy old hag" whom he met just outside the house. Thoroughly enraged by the insult to her mother, Kentucky steps into the parlor and boldly tells Bartlett who she is, and too late he realizes the blunder he has made. Kentucky declares that it is her intention to immediately depart for home with her mother.

The girl away, Bartlett finds that he is dreadfully desolate without her. Admitting to Mrs. Wentworth that he was wrong in his contention, he leaves for Virginia to again find Kentucky. Ere the picture ends we see them reconciled.

Cathrine Countiss, who was starred in "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie," "The White Sister" and "The Christian" has just been placed under contract by the Life-Photo Film Corporation for photoplay work. Miss Countiss will make her first appearance in the photoplay field by assuming the lead in "The Avalanche," another recent acquisition of this concern. Present plans provide for the release of "The Avalanche" through Alco as the next Life-Photo production following "Springtime." Miss Countiss and "The Avalanche" are well-known to Broadway as both have played long engagements there. Both, too, have been seen widely throughout the country. "The Avalanche," as a legitimate play, was written by Robert Hilliard and W. A. Tremayne and deals with the attempts of a woman to wreck a man through manipulation of the mining stock "Avalanche." Before the man's marriage, he and the woman were engaged. She later married and her husband died. Meanwhile her former fiance had married. This act arouses the hatred of the central feminine figure in the play, which Miss Countiss is to portray.

Lubin Sensationalism

The sinking of a Herreshoff steam yacht off Jacksonville, Florida, and the plunge of a touring car from a wharf into the ocean are two of the sensational features of the two-reel photoplay "The Man from the Sea," which is released by the Lubin Manufacturing Company December 10. "The Man from the Sea" was written by Charles Goddard and Paul Dickey, authors of "The Ghost Breaker" and "The Misleading Lady," and was adapted for the camera by George Terwilliger of the Lubin staff of directors.

In order to get the proper background for the story Mr. Lubin sent a special company to Florida and purchased the steam yacht to use in the big climax. The story itself is intensely dramatic. Two millionaires, both of whom are wireless experts, are in love with the same girl. They play cards to decide which shall wed the girl and one of them cheats. The loser goes on board his steam yacht and while he is in his wireless room the crew lock him in the room, desert and set fire to the yacht. The millionaire is drowned. The weird messages sent by him and his subsequent return from the bottom of the ocean to claim his rightful bride make one of the most intensely dramatic and senational photoplays imaginable.

As a marine spectacle the burning of the steam yacht and its disappearance under the waves is magnificent. Another sensation in the play is the wild flight of an automobile, with two of the leading characters in the front seat, down the length of an old wharf and into the ocean. In order to secure the under water pictures, where the drowned millionaire sends wireless messages to his rival on shore, it was necessary to construct a special glass tank and the effect obtained is startling. The play is said to be one of the costliest two-reelers the Lubin Company has ever produced and incidentally one of the most sensational.

To Release Through World

The California Motion Picture Corporation, through Alexander E. Beyfuss, general manager, has effected a plan to release its feature-productions through the World Film Corporation. The initial production under this plan will be a five-reel feature, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," adapted from the novel by Alice Hogan Rice, as dramatized by herself and Anne Crawford Flexer, and originally produced by Liebler & Co. This feature will be released on January fourth. Miss Beatriz Michelena, whose work in "Salomy Jane" has made her famous in filmdom, will be starred as "Lovey Mary." Her support will include Blanche Chapman and Andrew Robson. On January 18 the California Motion Picture Corporation will release "Mignon," in a prologue and four parts, through the World Film Corporation. Miss Beatriz Michelena's portrayal of the title part is said to be as nearly perfect as the art of acting in pictures can be effected. The third release will be "The Lily of Poverty Flats," a story based on Bret Harte's famous poem, "Her Letter, His Answer and Her Last Letter." In this production the California Corporation will endeavor to outdo even "Salomy Jane" for scenic effects and stirring action.

Other subjects in preparation by the California Motion Picture Corporation are "Salvation Nell," the famous play by Edward Sheldon, and "The Price She Paid," David Graham Phillips' well-known novel.

Mary Pickford As "Cinderella"

When the Famous Players included, in a recent announcement of forthcoming productions, Mary Pickford in a subject entitled "The Stepsister," they termed it "a genuine surprise." Just how much of a surprise it is was disclosed only last week, when it was explained that "The Stepsister" is nothing else than a modern and original version of the century-old classic, "Cinderella." The subject is to appear on the Paramount program, December 28, and is described as the Paramount Christmas release.

American's "Out of the Darkness"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

ON December 7 the American Film Manufacturing Company will release a two-reel production entitled "Out of the Darkness," in which a good story, human acting, clear photography, carefully chosen settings and masterful direction are blended together in such a manner that the result is most pleasing to behold.

A picture of this variety is rather difficult to analyze, as all parts of it appear to balance, and to mention one worthy point and not another seems an injustice. The acting, however, is what will probably attract the public more than anything else, unless it is the story. Harry Von Meter gives a virile portrayal of a thief, known as the "Wolf," which adds greatly to his enviable reputation as a character lead. The acting of William Garwood and Vivian Rich is pleasing throughout, and in the scenes showing the young lover's first call upon his sweetheart they give a delightfully human portrayal of both types. Louise Lester, as the wife of the "Wolf," and Jack Richardson, as a friendly detective, also carry their parts in fine style.

Terry and Kitty discover their love.

The plot is worked out in a very plausible way and numerous dramatic situations are scattered throughout it. A distinct "punch" is felt toward the end of the second reel, when the thief realizes the folly of the life he has been leading and decides to reform. The settings throughout are praiseworthy, as has been said before, a business office and a saloon in the slums being especially well handled. Considering all the points of the production, it is an altogether worthy one.

The opening scenes disclose the life of crime led by the "Wolf." He has always covered up his tracks, but he makes one attempt too many and is caught by Steele, a detective, and sent to prison for five years. His wife and daughter are heart-broken but determine to make the best of things. In prison the "Wolf" meets Terry Manning, a trusty, who is nearing the end of his sentence and they become friends.

Both are released on the same day and the "Wolf" leads Terry to his old haunts. The young man, however, announces his intention of going straight and Steele hears him. The detective offers to help him and succeeds in having him made bookkeeper for the firm of Boyd & Co. The "Wolf" sneers at the young man's determination to reform and goes home, intending to return to his old life of crime.

He finds that his wife and daughter have moved into a neat cottage and they are happy together. A feeling of shame creeps over him and he turns away from the house, determined that he shall not darken their lives. The daughter, Kitty, is a stenographer in the employ of Boyd & Co. and the moment she meets Terry she knows she is in love with him, and he returns her feeling.

Time passes and the love between Kitty and Terry grows. The "Wolf" has been on the downward path and has not been able to secure enough money to keep him alive. On the night that Terry is to make his first call on Kitty he finds the "Wolf" in a starving condition and takes him to his home, not knowing that he is the father of the girl he loves. After he has fed his former cell-mate, Terry leaves him and goes to Kitty.

While the young man and the girl talk in the parlor of her home and realize how much they mean to each other, the "Wolf" takes the key to the office of Boyd & Co. from Terry's coat and steals to the business house, his old desire to steal upon him again. He breaks into the safe and takes all the money it contains and then, before making his get-away, decides to have a final look at his wife and daughter. Terry in the meantime has confessed his past life to Kitty and she in turn has told him that her father is also a convict.

As the "Wolf" reaches the little cottage the lovers become engaged and when he looks in the window he sees them happily in each other's arms, with his wife giving them her blessing. The realization of his own unworthiness comes upon him and he returns to the office and replaces the money. Before he can manage to get away, however, the watchman sees him. In the struggle which follows the "Wolf" is shot. He makes his way to Terry's room and when the young man returns he tells him of what has happened and asks him to bring his daughter and wife to him, as it is too late for a doctor. Terry complies with his request and the "Wolf" passes away, surrounded by those who love him, his final words being those of blessing for Terry and Kitty.

"Markia" Screened

On Friday morning, November 27, Messrs. Corn and Noto of the K. C. Booking Company, 512 Mallers building, Chicago, gave a special performance of the five-reel Kinetophote feature, Markia, at Fulton's.

Scene from the Kinetophote release "Markia."

The picture is superb in many respects and deals with the siege of Carthage by the Roman legions, commanded by Scipio. Markia, a lady of royal parentage, has many exciting experiences before she finally wins the love of Sirabes, the handsome lieutenant of the Carthagian army. The scenes in which the storming of the walls of Carthage are shown are massive and exciting, while thousands of supernumeraries are used and the photography is of an excellent quality. "Markia" was reviewed at length in another issue of MOTOGRAPHY upon its first showing in New York. Bookings can be made from either Mr. Corn or Mr. Noto at 512 Mallers building, Chicago.

New Vitagraph Bill

Manager Loomis of the Vitagraph Theater wanders away from the straight picture program in his new bill beginning Monday, November 23, to the extent of one singing number. The combination of the Mazzanotte Trio and a still, but nevertheless vividly realistic, reproduction of the Bay of Naples, showing Vesuvius in eruption, was well received by the audience on opening night.

After Lillian Walker, Arthur Ashley and others demonstrated "The Methods of Margaret," a single reel program release, Wally Van's four-reel comedy, "The Man Behind the Door," claimed and received everybody's attention. Marguerite Bertsch adapted the play from Archibald Clavering Gunter's book of the same name. At times the action borders upon slapstick, but the majority of it puts over its fun by comedy portrayal and humorously embarrassing situations.

The Mazzanotte Trio's performance is succeeded by a single reel comedy, "The Mysterious Mr. Davey," through which medium Sydney Drew and his company prove to be unusually clever and entertaining. A three-part dramatic story of the days of the western pioneers completes the program. It has a novel beginning and ending, and is well staged, but the plot in the main can hardly be considered original. A motoring party stops in an old, wasted frontier town to repair a tire, and is accosted by one of the old settlers. The query, "Has this town always been as dead as this?" brings forth the patriarch's story of how it had flourished some decades before when 'Liza Filkins, "the sagebrush gal," had presided over the coffee house. Romance, comedy and tragedy all figure in the narrative, which is concluded with 'Liza's departure for new lands and a happy married life as the wife of Bill McTwirk, a "square" gambler.

By the time the old man finishes telling the happenings of the years that represent the greater part of his life, the traveler, to whom its recital has been but a few minutes' pastime, find that the chauffeur has the tire repaired, and continue on their journey.

Exhibitors' Ball

The main topic of conversation in New York filmdom at the present time seems to be the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Ball, which will be held on Monday night, December 7, at the Grand Central Palace, where four floors have been engaged. From the hearty response accorded by the manufacturers in the sale of boxes and the immense advance sale of tickets to the general public, this is expected to be the greatest motion picture social event in the annals of the industry. One of the novel features at this function will be the sextette grand march exclusively for photoplayers, which will be led by Mary Pickford, Francis X. Bushman, Mary Fuller, King Baggott, Marguerite Snow, James Cruze, Anita Stewart, Earl Williams, Clara K. Young, Marc McDermott, Gene Gauntier, Jack Clarke, and in which all the other prominent photoplayers will take part.

There is no doubt that this will be a colossal gathering of manufacturers, producers, photoplayers, exhitors and photoplay fans, come together in their gala attire for the purpose of having one jolly good time. In the four theaters which are being planned for this event, the manufacturers will exhibit their latest pre-releases.

New Wrinkle in Pathe Feature

Reviewed By Charles R. Condon

THE mistaken identity problem is a many-sided one, and offers innumerable possibilities for plots pivoting on this one situation. Up to the present the most popular version of this tangle has been that of the boy or girl who has done wrong, and whose twin brother or sister suffers the penalty until the final denouement, when the two meet, through double exposure, generally, and the misunderstandings are explained away.

Now comes a three-reel Pathe feature entitled "The Stolen Birthright" that avoids the beaten path of dramas of this kind and handles the mistaken identity plot with an entirely new set of characters, situations, and details. Here the mix-up contains neither villainy nor wrong-doing, and concerns only the outcome of two romances. Double-exposure plays but a small part in the picture, and no part at all in the story. It is introduced merely as a novel way of showing the development of the two threads of the story at the same time, the backgrounds being two separate scenes and the characters many miles apart. Photographically it is an exceedingly clever accomplishment, and is a great help in keeping the story clearly outlined in the spectator's mind.

Wharton, Inc., produced the picture, and Thurlow Bergen, Elsie Esmond, Frank Brownlee, Bessie Emerick, Robin H. Townley, and Harry Carr are among the members of the cast. Mr. Brownlee gives a fine impersonation of the big-hearted, fearless gambler, High-hat Harry. Miss Esmond is seen in the dual role of Mary Haskins and Alice Singleton. The rest of the characters are well-placed and receive able delineation.

Silas Haskins' joy at being the father of a newly born girl is cut short by receiving word from his landlord, Singleton, that he will be ejected unless he pay the rent on his farm. It happens that at this time Singleton's wife gives birth to twin daughters, but,

While he is doing this he is startled by seeing a baby carriage plunge over the precipice above him, and land at his feet. In it are the Singleton twins. Quick as a flash he substitutes his dead baby for one of those in the carriage, and returns with the live one to his wife, hoping to save her reason. When the Singleton maid and her searching party come upon the baby carriage they do not notice the deception. Alice, the other baby, is raised in ignorance of the existence and "death" of her twin sister.

Haskins moves West to start life anew, and raises Mary as his own child. Twenty years later we see her tending bar in her father's frontier saloon. Singleton has died in the meantime, and Alice is compelled to earn her own living as a stenographer. Her employer, Smith, is attracted to her and eventually they become married. High-hat Harry, a newcomer in the little western town in which the Haskins live, becomes Mary's idol by the bravery he exhibits in handling the town's "bad men." Deciding that the girl should have a protector he offers himself to Haskins who, in turn, refers him to the girl, herself. She confesses her love to him, but refuses to become his wife until he has gone to some big city and made good by some means other than that of his profession, gambling.

Harry assents, and takes up residence in the same town in which Alice lives. He meets her one night, and, thinking her Mary, makes advances to her, and is confronted by Smith. He writes her a note which falls into her husband's hands, making him insanely jealous. In a fit of rage the latter turns Alice out of the house, and goes away in an effort to forget her. High-hat Harry again meets Alice on the street, and she finally succeeds in convincing him that she is not his fiancee. In the meantime Smith has come upon Mary, and learned his mistake.

A scene is shown of two trains speeding past each other, one east bound and the other west bound, and in the following scene the lovers are seen greeting each other, Smith and Alice at the station in the city, and Harry and Mary at the frontier town depot.

Myron Fulton Married

The innumerable friends of Leroy Myron Fulton were amazed to learn on Friday, November 20, that Mr. Fulton had taken unto himself a bride on Thursday afternoon, November 19 in the person of Miss Minnie Tage of Glen View, Illinois. The wedding occurred at the Congregational parsonage of Rev. J. Morrison Thomas on Montrose boulevard, Chicago, and was a very quiet affair, the bride and groom being accompanied only by Mrs. E. E. Fulton, the mother of the groom, and Mrs. C. E. Fulton, his aunt. All the employees of E. E. Fulton & Company, some thirty-three in number, gave a surprise luncheon on Tuesday evening in the projection room of the Fulton Company, Lake and La Salle streets, the occasion being a most joyous one and a complete surprise to everyone in the Fulton family, as it was arranged entirely without their knowledge. Following a witty toast by Frank McMillan, Myron and his bride-to-be were presented with a handsome and costly table lamp, and showered with congratulations and good wishes. Mr. Fulton has been superintendent of the mechanical department of the Fulco concern for some time, and Motography joins with a host of others in wishing him well. Immediately after the ceremony on Thursday afternoon the happy couple left for Valparaiso, Indiana, from which place they returned to Chicago on Sunday. They will make their home for the present at 1450 Melville place, Chicago.

Alliance Secures Oz Output

The Alliance Film Corporation recently signed contracts by which it secures the future output of the Oz Film Company for release through its exchanges. The first subject to be distributed under the new agreement will be "The Last Egyptian," a play laid in modern Egypt, which will be released on December 7.

An agreement has also been arrived at between the two concerns whereby the Oz Company is to produce popular novels and plays. These will be selected by the officers of the Alliance Corporation.

New Combination of Producers

The United Motion Picture Producers, Inc., an organization composed of a number of well known producing companies, has just completed arrangements whereby all its products will be marketed through the United Film Service Program. The combination will specialize in one and two reel dramatic and comedy productions which will be released daily on the United program, commencing at a date in the near future to announced later.

Among the companies which form the new combine are the Albuquerque Film Manufacturing Company, Crystal Film Company, Features Ideal, Gene Gauntier Feature Players, Mittenthal Film Company, Nelson Film Corporation, St. Louis Motion Picture Company and Smallwood Film Corporation. The rosters of these companies contain the names of such well-known stars as Gene Gauntier, Dot Farley, Ethel Grandin, Charles DeForest, Natalie De Lontan, Mary Ainslee, Winna Brown, Florence Gail, Helen Gay, J. Arthur Nelson, Grace St. Claire and Gervaise Graham.

Ludwig G. B. Erb is president of the United Motion Picture Producers' Inc., and Gilbert P. Hamilton is vice-president. Leo Stern, a New York lawyer, holds the office of treasurer and H. M. Goetz that of secretary. The new organization will endeavor to give to its distributing agents a program of the highest quality and with this aim in view all the companies are now busily engaged making pictures which are certain to meet with public approval.

Sends Forces to Coast

On Wednesday, November 18, David Horsley sent three directors and forty members of his producing forces to Los Angeles, where they will resume their work in the new studios which Mr. Horsley is building in that city. Mr. Horsley's recent purchase of the Frank C. Bostock animals has necessitated the establishment of mammoth plant on the coast for the making of an extraordinary series of single and multiple reel animal pictures.

With the splendid facilities for taking every kind of motion picture which this elaborate layout will provide in Los Angeles, Mr. Horsley deemed it unwise to continue the use of his Bayonne plant during the winter, and for that reason has closed down the Jersey studio and will do all of his producing for the next six months in California. Milton H. Fahrney and his talented wife headed the list of migrants, which included Harry La Pearl, the famous pantomimist, camera men, scenic artists, property men and principal actors.

An Attractive Feature

The Great Northern Film Company's latest release is a three-reel detective drama entitled "The Charlotte Street Mystery." It is said to contain some novel and startling effects.

The story deals with the interesting adventures of an exceptionally clever woman who seeks to elude the law and succeeds in baffling a shrewd detective for some time, but, is finally captured after several thrilling escapes. The role of the woman is in the hands of Eslie Frolich, the capable Great Northern leading woman, who gives a very vivid characterization. All of the other parts are also well played.

"The Lure o' the Windigo"-Selig

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

BASED on an Indian legend, which is held sacred by the Cree and Algonquin tribes, and dealing with the lives of primitive characters, who work out their destinies in the forests far north of civilization, the two-reel release of the Selig Polyscope Company on December 14 is one of great strength and appeal.

The plot is not a fresh one, as it deals with the ruining of a girl by the man whom she and her family trusted, but the skill of the author, Maibelle Heikes Justice, in weaving human interest and virile action into it is visible throughout. There are five chief characters created and each of these is made so vivid that after the first few scenes one follows their doings with as much interest as though they really lived. The players each do their share of work and, while none of them is featured, the work of Lamar Johnstone as Kiawa, an Indian, stands out a little above the others. Edith Johnson gives a sympathetic portrayal of the girl and Lafayette McKee and Charles Wheelock, as her brother and lover, carry their parts with great strength. At the climax a fight takes place between the former and Barney Furey, who is cast as an officer in the Royal Mounted, in which action is plentiful. Frank Mayo, Lillian Hayward and Lucile Joy have the other roles of importance.

The scenery throughout is rare. One scene, showing a quarter of a mile or more of sloping hillside with a small lake at the bottom is the closest approach to perfection in photographic art this reviewer has been privileged to see for many months. The atmosphere of the North is suggested in every scene and Director F. J. Grandon deserves great credit for the treatment he has given the subject. The photography is good and the few interior sets that are used are all carefully planned and appropriate.

The lure of the Windigo.

Annette and McChesnay.

The story opens by disclosing the home life of the Le Clerq family. The father is too old for active work and spends his time in the cabin, puffing at his pipe. Louis, the son, is a lumberman and the support of the other. His sister, Annette, and the mother complete the happy circle. Another person who is always welcome in their home is Jacques Le Bere, also a lumberman, who secretly loves Annette, but because she is engaged to Sergeant McChesnay of the Mounted Police he never tells her of his affection.

Just before Louis and Jacques start on a long trip into the timber country McChesnay rides up to the cabin and announces that he will stay and visit several days. Jacques does not trust the man but Louis tells him to take good care of his sister and leaves, taking Jacques with him. Annette's love for McChesnay leads to her downfall and after a few days he rides away, promising that he will return shortly and make her his wife. Before he leaves the district, however, the officer spies another victim in the squaw of Kiawa, an Indian who lives nearby. He accomplishes his purpose only after wounding Kiawa and when he rides away the Indian vows that he will never rest until he sees the worthless man dead.

Kiawa follows McChesnay to the settlement and there shoots him with a stone fired from a sling-shot and makes his escape. The months pass and Kiawa keeps track of the officer's whereabouts, as he has heard that the shot was not fatal. Annette's child is born and her father turns her out into the world. Kiawa sees and understands. He knows that she will not come with him, so he resorts to strategy and mocks the call of the Windigo. She follows it and the Indian leads her toward the settlement, where he knows McChesnay is stopping.

Louis and Jacques return from the timber country and halt at the settlement before going home. They meet McChesnay and all are together when Kiawa leads Annette and her child before them. The Indian accuses McChesnay and the officer is forced to admit that he is the father of the baby. The two men who love Annette control themselves until a missionary has been secured and the marriage of the girl and McChesnay performed. Then Louis faces the officer and tells him that one of them must die. McChesnay refuses to be bluffed and removes his uniform coat, thus making the fight man to man. They lock and struggle. At last Louis rises, while the still form of McChesnay remains on the floor. Then Jacques folds Annette in his arms and with Louis they make their way from the settlement to the little cabin in the forest, where Annette's father is persuaded to forgive her.

May Irwin's Famous Players' Debut

Reviewed by Mabel Condon

MAY IRWIN contributes her ample figure, her infectious smile and her big fund of humor to the portrayal of the role of Mrs. Black in the Famous Players' current release, "Mrs. Black Is Back." There are four reels of "Mrs. Black," and they pass as one, so well is the interest carried and the story built, step by step, toward a climax which is in sight almost from the film's inception. Miss Irwin is well supported by a cast which comprises Charles Lane as Prof. Black; Elmer Booth as Jack, Mrs. Black's son; Marie Pavis as the professor's sister, Priscilla Black; Wellington A. Playter as Tom Larkey, builder and reducer of flesh; James Hester as Major Thorne, who holds Jack's I. O. U. for $1,000, and which he tries to collect from Mrs. Black; Howard Missimer as Jack's foreign valet, Clara Blandick as Mrs. Black's sister, and Cyril Chadwick as Bramley Bush, a guest of the Blacks.

The exterior scenes were all filmed at the summer home of Miss Irwin, on the Thousand Islands. The picturesqueness of the place loses nothing by the filming and the interior scenes are equally attractive.

Peace prevails in the Black household.

There is excellent photography to add to the film's value and the direction makes for speedy and satisfying action. Miss Irwin is the center of interest at all times, though Mr. Lane gets a considerable share of the public's appreciation, and Mr. Booth and Mr. Playter are next in point of interest. The conclusion of each of the first three reels possesses the proper amount of punch to inspire a lively curiosity as to what is to come next; there is no puzzling lapse of action between any of the scenes, such as is very often met with in comedy and excused on the ground that it is comedy, and there is an ease about Miss Irwin's method of offering entertainment that makes her personality felt throughout the picture's four reels.

Mrs. Black tries to reduce, in "Mrs. Black is Back."

Miss Irwin begins the story in the character of the Widow Dangerfield, whose accidental, not to say abrupt, meeting with Prof. Black, geologist, precipitates an undignified tumble and the beginning of an affair of the heart which culminates in the widow's becoming Mrs. Black.

The professor believes his bride to be of but twenty-nine summers, and her son, who is away at school, to be a child of ten. Mrs. Black dares not undeceive him, and commands her grownup son, who is "doing" Europe, to continue to "do" it for another year. Jack writes an I. O. U. for $1,000 for Major Thorne, and the major leaves for America to collect it from Jack's mother. Mrs. Black, previous to her marriage, contracted a $400 debt for "reducing" under the direction of Tom Larkey, and the major and the physical culture instructor begin to hound her for payment. Meanwhile, her sister has arrived for a visit, and is told to keep the secret of Jack's size and his mother's age from the professor, who is anxious for the return of the supposedly ten-year-old boy, and lays in a stock of toys with which to entertain him when he does come.

Jack writes that he is in love with a girl named Priscilla, who has sailed for America, and he is going to follow. A cable is sent to restrain him, but he never receives it, and the first intimation his mother has of his nearness is his telephone call from the station. Meanwhile, the professor's sister has arrived, and when Jack's telephone message is received the professor rounds up a party of girls and ice-cream to do honor to little Jack's arrival home. Mrs. Black sends her sister to waylay Jack, as she has heard the professor declare he could never forgive a lie, and when Jack's valet arrives he is introduced to Black as Mrs. Black's brother-in-law. The sister misses Jack, and when he comes he is hustled into the kitchen and the cook's apron and cap.

Priscilla meets him there, he discloses his identity and finally Mrs. Black has to confess the situation to her husband. Her debts have been paid by her sister and Mrs. Black leaves home in the first auto she can secure. The result is a blowup, and Mrs. Black lands in a cornfield amidst the debris of the machine. She painfully makes her way back to the house, to the forgiving and loving arms of her son and husband. And there is happiness in the professor's household, now that "Mrs. Black Is Back."

Edison's "Fantasma" A Pleasing Film

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

DIFFERENT kinds of romance, drama and melodrama appeal to different classes of people, but comedy is universally popular. Good, clean, legitimate fun never fails to entertain. If it be of the juvenile variety it may not send grown-ups into the ecstasies of laughter that it will children, but it will arouse their interest more or less, anyway. As a stage spectacle the Hanlon Brothers' "Fantasma" toured the entire United States and met with public approval, and as a five-part Edison photoplay it bids fair to repeat the performance.

George Hanlon, Jr., plays the part of Pico in the picture, and to him falls the honor of visiting the haunted house and being maltreated by the doors, windows, chairs, beds and pictures, which have an uncomfortable habit of hitting him when his back is turned. Another person of note in the cast is the aged, but lively, William S. Carlton, of the famed

Edwin Clark as Prince Arthur, Marie LaManna as Princess Lena and William S. Carlton as Zamaliel, in Edison's "Fantasma."

Carlton Opera Company. Mr. Carlton fills the role of Zamaliel, the monarch of evil.

The actual story has to do with the romance of Prince Arthur and Princess Lena, Pico's comedy injections taking up a large part of the film, but not in any way furthering the story. Edwin Clarke has been well chosen to enact the part of the chivalrous prince and the role of Princess Lena could not have fitted Marie La Manna better had it been created especially for her. She is sweet, dainty, of the Cinderella type, and is a splendid actress. Grace Goodall is seen in the role of Fantasma, the queen of good and light. Mathilde Baring, Richard Neill, William Fables, George Schrode, William Ruge and a nimble crowd of demons and fairies complete the cast.

Charles M. Seay directed the picture and he had no small task on his hands, considering that when the play is boiled down it does not contain more than three reels of actual plot. The interior settings are skillfully constructed and artistically painted, and are important factors in sustaining the atmosphere of the story.

Prince Arthur succeeds in winning the Princess Lena's hand, and from then on is continually beset with trials and dangers. Zamaliel, the monarch of evil and darkness, rises from the lower regions in a blast of sulphurous smoke and flame to prey upon mankind. Fairies from the court of Fantasma, the queen of good and foe of Zamaliel, inform her of his coming upon earth, and she sets out to fight his evil influences.

Zamaliel is attracted by the Princess Lena's beauty, and determines to capture her. He haunts Prince Arthur and his fiancee in their wanderings, hoping to use his evil powers upon them, but Fantasma protects the lovers. One day, however, Zamaliel catches them unguarded, and makes away with the fair princess. Arthur attempts to follow, but is beaten back by the evil one's imps.

Fantasma then creates the jolly Pico to assist the prince in his search for his betrothed. They become separated and Pico wanders into a haunted house, from which, after a series of hair-raising experiences, he manages to escape. He next finds himself before the gates of a castle, and, after knocking incessantly, is allowed within and then made a prisoner. Pico is sentenced to death and beheaded, but Fantasma appears in the execution tower, puts his head back upon his shoulders and restores his life.

In the meantime, the prince meets with adventures that are every bit as thrilling and discouraging as those experienced by his assistant. The two meet near the seashore. Fantasma appears to them and commands that they continue their search for the princess beneath the sea. They obey her, and there find the princess in the power of the wicked Zamaliel. A few strokes from Pico's trusty sword clears the way for the lovers, and in the final scene we see them sailing away on the Sea of Happiness.

Alco Secures Big Comedy

The newly organized Alco Film Corporation, under the presidency of Walter Hoff Seely, began its career this week by starting a campaign to procure several other producing firms of the quality of Life Photo Film, B. A. Rolfe, Popular Plays and Players, and The All-Star Feature Corporation. That the Alco concern, under its new board of directors and with its new policy just in the borning, means to fortify its clients with an absolute money-attracting program, was evidenced when announcement was made that Ad Kessel of the New York Motion Picture Company and Mr. Seely of the Alco had arranged to release the great comedy, "Tillie's Punctured Romance," with Marie Dressler as a regular unit on the Alco program. "Tillie's Punctured Romance," in which Miss Dressler and Charles Chaplin play the leading roles, Mack Sennet, the director, considers his best work, and authorities claim it as the most highly amusing comedy film ever produced. The Alco Film Corporation is said to have paid Ad Kessel one hundred thousand dollars for the rights of "Tillie's Punctured Romance" and will release it Monday, December 21. The releases directly preceding and following that of December 21 will be Mabel Taliaferro in B. A. Rolfe's production of the well known stage success, "The Three of Us," which is now in its final stages, and the Life Photo Film Corporation's creation of Frederick Thompson-Klaw & Erlanger's success, "Springtime," with Florence Nash in the leading role. Olga Petrova, the brilliant dramatic star, will be seen December 7 in The Popular Plays and Players Company's "The Tigress." Jane Cowl in "The Garden of Lies" follows later.

Edison Signs Lee Arthur

The Edison Company has completed negotiations with Lee Arthur, the well-known playwright by which it will have the exclusive use of his works for Edison pictures. Mr. Arthur's fame is international and he today easily ranks among the foremost American playwrights.

A native of Shreveport, La., he attended Tulane University, from which he graduated with a degree of LL.D. After devoting several years to the practice of law in the city of New Orleans, he abandoned the profession for playwriting. Having traveled extensively as a student of the technique of drama, he wrote his first play, "The Gay Mr. Lightfoot," which proved a tremendous success upon the initial presentation in New York.

This was followed by "We-uns of Tennessee," in which Charles Hanford starred for two years, and "The Auctioneer," with David Warfield. Lee Arthur was then chosen by Klaw & Erlanger and Mark Twain to make a dramatization of "Huckleberry Finn" and "Tom Sawyer." Among other plays that originated from his pen may be mentioned "Cohen's Luck," with Joe Welsh; "Breaking into Society," with the Four Mortons; "Van Allen's Wife," with Fannie Ward, and "Putting It Over," which was considered by all critics to be the best baseball play ever written.

He has placed this season "A Little Nugget" with Daniel Frohman; "The Baby of the Family" and "The Morning After," which will be produced after the holidays.

In engaging the services of a writer of such high caliber the Edison Company has added an important link to its chain of authors of world-wide reputation. Mr. Arthur's first production for the screen is "The Last of the Hargroves," which is released on November 28.

Pathe Star Killed

It is a remarkable coincidence that almost simultaneously with the release of "More Than Queen," the fine Pathe colored picture in which Rene Alexandre starred, comes the news from France, that the talented actor has been killed in the great battle in Belgium. Alexandre was to the Pathe French drama what Max Linder is to the Pathe French comedy. No man of mediocre talent could be the leading man at the Comedie Francaise or the winner of the first prize for tragedy at the Conservatoire of Paris, and these are two of the honors gained by Alexandre, during his wonderfully successful artistic career.

HOLDING 'EM OUT.

THE majority of exhibitors wear a smile a foot wide when the line in front of the entrance begins to spread out of the lobby and down the avenue. Talking with fellow exhibitors the next day the average theater owner will proudly boast "we held 'em out from 8:30 till after 9 last night." But if either of these chaps had been in the long line of waiting patrons, who stood outside the door of the theater, do you suppose his smile would have been as broad or his boast as loud?

"It's good business," answers Mr. Exhibitor. "It shows my competitor down the way that I'm playing to capacity. It gets his goat. If I can keep it up awhile longer he's going to get disgusted and quit—then I'll have all the business to myself." That argument sounds all right, but will it work out? Isn't the patron who is compelled night after night to stand in a waiting line to obtain admittance going to be the one who will get disgusted? Isn't he finally going to become so impatient that, instead of waiting to get into the first house, he will drift along the street a little farther to the other show and spend his dime there?

Exhibitors in general are too much inclined to ignore the comfort of their patrons and to care too little whether they receive the proper attentions and courtesies or not. The public, though it is a long-suffering animal and one inclined to stand for much abuse at the hand of public service corporations and others, sooner or later will awake to the fact that it doesn't have to be trampled upon and ignored—in other words, that it has some rights of its own.

Had the exhibitor who smiled at the waiting line and boasted of "holding 'em out," taken steps to fix firmly in the minds of his patrons the fact that his first show begins promptly at 7 o'clock, and that the next performance starts at 8:45, would he not only have avoided the waiting line with all its discomfort in front of his house, but also made each and every one of his second show patrons honestly grateful for the seats they felt sure would be awaiting them at the second performance?

One prominent exhibitor to whom the matter was broached recently said "It can't be done," but in the next breath admitted that not long before he had himself, while playing a long feature, announced certain hours for starting his performances and found that a capacity second-show crowd was waiting to get in when the first performance was finished.

The vaudeville houses which play two performances an evening have long been able to play to two capacity houses, and Mr. and Mrs. Theatergoer plan just as religiously to attend the 8:45 or the 9:15 show as they would if they were planning on attending a legitimate entertainment several miles from their home. It will take time, but now that long features of five and six reels, in which well-known stars of the legitimate stage are seen in the leading roles, are becoming so common, there seems no reason why the picture house cannot establish a certain time for beginning its performances and advertise and bid for the second-show patronage just as successfully as does the vaudeville house in the same block.

Once the patrons learn the time for starting the second show, once they understand that they won't have to wait in long lines, but can be sure of comfortable seats, they will make it a point to be present on time, and the exhibitor will wear a smile and boast of his receipts the next day just as surely as he does under present conditions—only his smile will probably be broader and his receipts larger.

WHY NOT COMBINE THEM?

THERE are in Chicago about forty feature film offices and offices of New York manufacturers of films. A great many of these offices, running pictures wherever they can, haven't a sufficient supply of films to do much more than pay expenses—in fact, in some cases the offices are being run at a loss. One of the most serious conditions has been engendered by the multiplicity of offices. It is useless to expect an exhibitor to go to thirty-five or forty different places to look for film. He won't do it; he can't; he hasn't time. It is also useless for forty different solicitors to call on the same man in the effort to book pictures, because he cannot take them all. There is not only waste rent, waste salaries, but there is a tremendous waste effort. All of these offices cannot employ city solicitors, and those that can are unable to employ road men, so that a great many of them have to subsist on the business which comes in through mail solicitation. We have within our own observation the example of a man traveling to Milwaukee to solicit a booking on a feature film, being turned down by the exhibitor, and writing to his office in Chicago to ascertain if he could book the film for five or ten dollars less than it was offered by the road man.

If it is advantageous for makers of pictures to establish a program or releasing bureau, why is it not advantageous for makers of features to select some capable booking office in Chicago to release their features? Surely some arrangement could be made which would be more economical than the establishment of a branch office has proven for some of these makers. There would be an elimination of circularizing duplication, an elimination of railroad and street car fare, and the handler of the pictures could afford to advertise in his territory and would do so. A road man could obtain bookings far better if he had ten subjects for the exhibitor to select from instead of one or two.

Why isn't it possible for the New York makers who establish individual offices in cities like Chicago to select some shrewd operating concern and make arrangements for the handling of their product, not on a straight purchase plan, but on some basis similar to that on which they would establish their own offices?

ESTABLISHES PRECEDENT

In the new serial "Runaway June," written by George Randolph Chester, now being produced by the Reliance Motion Picture Company, a novel mode of procedure is being adopted. The Reliance Company has realized the necessity of improving pictures from the artistic standpoint, and in its search for a man thoroughly versed in the pictorial and artistic end of the business, hit up Dr. Arnold Genthe, whose fame is world-wide as the premier still photographer of America. Dr. Genthe, whose studio is located on Fifth avenue, has made a study for many years of light effects and color photography, and he is probably the best versed man in America in this particular line.

Leah Baird of the Vitagraph players was married on Wednesday, November 28.

Your old friend Don Meaney just can't help editing things. This week brings to our desk Vol. 1. No. 1., of the Universal Pacific Coast Studio News, which is devoted to news of the players and films of the big "U" studios of the West Coast. Good luck, Don. Long may the new sheet wave.

From way down in Texas comes a short epistle from one E. A. Barrymore, formerly Chicago representative of the Telegraph, but now engaged in punching cows instead of a typewriter. Barry explains his abrupt departure from our midst and sends greetings to former pals. Best wishes E. A. May you become a second Tom Mix.

THESE BE TROUBLOUS TIMES!

The British Bioscope of a recent date contains a little story about a certain English exhibitor who was in the big city making his bookings and sent this wire to his house manager at home:—"Keep Airship off. Arriving 7:30 When the Earth Trembles." The message, upon its arrival, brought a whole host of Scotland Yard men to the telegraph office to apprehend a German spy, but the film titles were finally explained and the sleuths departed.

MORE FROM BENNIE

Since we promised more from Bennie, the Nat'l Waterproof Film Company's office boy, we'll fire another wad immediately, although we realize only too well that many of you have not yet fully recovered from last week's spasm. Here's Bennie's latest discoveries in the way of epitaphs:—

"Stranger, this grave is greedy Pete's.
He joined a club for just the eats.
He ate and ate, till he couldn't swaller.
It cost his life—also a dollar."

"Here doth our friend, Punk Hauser, lie.
Oh what a pity he should die!
In life he censored without sense,
In death he'll get his recompense."

Do we hear any cries of "Go on! Go on!"

We thought not.

Lasky's Story of Circus Life

Reviewed by Mabel Condon

THERE is the big "white top," the rough and tumble work of the chalk-faced clowns, the bare-back riders with short, bobbing skirts, the pop-corn and peanut venders, the triumphal parade around the chip and sawdust covered ring—and there is "The Circus Man," in the five-reel film of that title presented by the Lasky Film Company.

Theodore Roberts has the role which gives the story its name and, as always, Mr. Roberts' work is excellent. Another important role is that of Jode Mullally in the character of David Jenison who is falsely accused of the murder of his grandfather and is befriended by the wife of the circus man, who secures work for him as a clown and in this disguise, he eludes the search of detectives. The Cronk brothers, one a cripple, are hangers-on of the circus; Raymond Hattan, as the cripple, does a good bit of character work and Howard Hickman as the slick young man of good clothes and nimble fingers, is exactly the type one would imagine the role of Dick Cronk would demand. It is hoped the public will see more of Mr. Hickman's work, providing he fits future roles as well as he does that of the elder brother, Dick Cronk.

Hubert Whitehead makes a good "heavy" in the guise of David Jenison's scheming uncle, who murders his own father and by means of a forged will usurps the wealth that had already been bequeathed to the old man's grandson, David. James Neill has the short but telling role of the grandfather whose murder is abetted by the negro attorney, Isaac Perry, in which character Billy Elmer is seen. Fred Montague is Col. Grand, who finances the circus, Mabel Van Buren is the wife of the circus man, and Florence Dagmar has an acceptable part as the daughter, Christine Braddock..

As the circus scenes are those of a real circus, and since they are the ones which go to make up the greater length of the film an atmosphere of reality prevails throughout the picture's five reels, which has good photography as another necessary quality.

The preference of David's grandfather for David, rather than for his wayward son, Frank, develops the situation which ends in the death of the old man at the hand of his son. David, attracted by the shot, is seized as the murderer but escapes during the night, returns to the house for his coat and bank book and goes to a small town which is given over to the enjoyment of a circus. Members of the circus recognize him from posters as the man for whose capture a $500 reward is offered. The wife of the circus man secures work for him as a clown, but her husband makes him pay $500 as silence money. Dick Cronk helps solve the mystery of the death of David's grandfather and Frank, dying, confesses to the murder. David returns to his estate and after several years, again meets Christine. Col. Grant has bought out the circus man's share of the show and later sends the circus man to prison on a false charge. When the latter is freed he attempts to kill the colonel, but Ernie, the cripple, does the deed in defense of his brother who is threatened by the colonel, and escapes. Dick is convicted in his stead, but later released on Ernie's dying confession. David and Christine are quietly married and the circus man and his wife go west to start life anew on a ranch.

"Roxie" Gets Loving Cup

S. L. Rothapfel, the popular manager of the Strand theater, in New York City, was presented on Sunday last with a silver loving cup by Jesse L. Lasky and David Belasco. The presentation was made to show the appreciation of the managers for the artistic handling of the feature film "The Rose of the Rancho" by Mr. Rothapfel. It occured in the private office of Mr. Rothapfel, the presentation speech being made by Mr. Lasky. The cup is solid silver, stands about two feet high and bears on one side the inscription "To S. L. Rothapfel from Jesse L. Lasky and David Belasco in token of their appreciation of his services in presenting a picturized verson of the play "The Rose of the Rancho," November 15, 1914."

At the request of Chancellor McCormick, a date has been set for the showing of George Kleine's "Julius Caesar" at the University of Pittsburgh.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brevities of the Business

Here's a brand new pic of Philip Lonergan, who came to the Thanhouser studio last spring in the capacity of one-and-two-reel editor for the Princess company, and is now filling a position which gives him the right to the title, editor of Thanhouser scripts. His coming to the Thanhouser studio last spring, however, did not mark his beginning in the script world. That occurred in May of 1912 and the New Rochelle studio provided the start. For twenty weeks previous he had been gathering experience by helping his brother Lloyd when the latter was confined to his home with a broken leg and at the same time was providing the Thanhouser directors with working material. So Phil, as people best know the younger of the two Lonergans, gleaned valuable experience, in exchange for valuable help and was at home in the position of assistant script editor when the opportunity offered. In July, 1913, the late C. J. Hite chose Phil Lonergan to go to the Majestic coast studio, where he wrote and selected scripts until last May, when Mr. Hite summoned him back to New Rochelle and gave him entire charge of the Princess script department. But a great part of the work attendant upon Thanhouser productions devolved upon Phil, and with bestowal of the title manager of production upon Lloyd, that of Thanhouser editor became Phil's. So that virtually defines his work and position at the present time. So outside of that plus the recreation of cutting his own films, whenever he can find the time to do it, and being generally helpful with both advice and deed on many affairs of importance, the position of Thanhouser editor is merely one which calls for about three original scripts a week. Being pleasant, witty and always active are a few of the qualities which make for the popularity of Philip Lonergan.

Charles M. Seay, director of Edison films, had a full page feature story in a recent issue of the New York Sun. "Locating the Atmosphere for Motion Pictures," was the title. That New York and its environs supply the best location in the western world for the making of screen plays was the point Mr. Seay made and he illustrated it with stills from Edison pictures lately made.

Miss Anna Luther, late of the Universal Company, has been chosen to play opposite Tom Terris in the Kinetophote Corporation picture, "The Man's Shadow."

Thomas Bedding is now connected with the publicity department of the World Film Corporation and is handling the press work on the Colonial picture, "Seats of the Mighty."

Harry Harvey, for a number of years a producer of features, has returned to work as director with the Balboa Amusement Producing Company in Long Beach, Cal., following a vacation, and is now producing a three-reel subject, "The Light in a Woman's Eyes."

The six-part feature picture, "Damon and Pythias," heralded for the past several weeks by the Universal Film Company, was introduced to Broadway on the evening of November 30 at the New York theater, where it undoubtedly will be the attraction for an indefinite length of time. The attendance was an invitation one and included officials of the Knights of Pythias together with a large showing of film people.

O. W. Biarmer left on Friday last for an extended tour of the country in the interests of Mina Films. Mr. Biarmer took with him samples of six " Mina" releases, the first of which, "The Thrilling Adventures of Count Verace," is to be made on December 17, through the General Film Company and other licensed exchanges.

W. C. Smith of the Nicholas Power Company was given an official vote of thanks at Monday evening's meeting of the Screen Club members. The gratitude and pleasure of the club was merited by Mr. Smith's contribution of novelty lighting effects during the progress of the grand march, at the club's Thanksgiving eve ball. A shower of flowers was one of the prettiest effects produced and one that brought forth great applause was a rain of American flags.

Harvey L. Gates has resigned his position with the press and Universal Weekly department and has joined Romaine Fielding at the Lubin plant, where he is assisting him generally. Both Mr. Fielding and Mr. Gates received a warm welcome at the Screen Club ball.

Louise Lester has started her annual "Do your Christmas shopping early" at the "Flying A" studios in Santa Barbara. Miss Lester says her campaign will reach all her friends in Santa Barbara this year.

Margaret Joslin demonstrates the fact that the stone-age method of winning a girl by battling for her hand is passe in the Essanay comedy, "Sophie's Sweetheart." While "Slippery Slim" and "Mustang Pete" are fighting a duel to see which shall wed her, she quietly slips away with a third and more pacific suitor and marries him.

Having signed contracts this week to furnish at least 5,000 feet of first-class film every seventh day to one of the marketing corporations, the Balboa Amusement Producing Company of Long Beach, California, has put a large crew of carpenters to work enlarging the studio stage to more than twice its present size.

Emil C. Jensen, for three years with the Kinemacolor Company of America, first in New York, and then as branch office manager in Chicago, comes back to the Chicago field, with which he is well acquainted, on November 30, as assistant to Felix Feist, the general manager of the Celebrated Players Film Company. Jensen is still a very young man, but he is pushing himself forward to advancement after advancement. Recently he has been the senior partner in the Feature Booking Office, of Brooklyn, and just before that he was the booking manager of the New York Exchange for Sawyer, Inc., at 1600 Broadway. He is not only a booking expert, but an able publicity man, having been assistant to Edwin Bower Hesser when the latter was general press representative for Kinemacolor.

World Film	4⅛	5½

There was active trading all last week in World Film Corp., principally on the New York Curb and also in Philadelphia and Boston. The market has shown considerable firmness. In one respect at least this stock is unique among the film securities—it being the only one where a quick market can be obtained at any time during the day.

Mutual Film Corp. common shows a new high level—68 bid with only a small amount of stock to be had at 73.

Syndicate Film Corp. sales were made at 165, which is the record price down to date. There is a rumor that another dividend of 25 per cent will be paid this month on both the common and preferred, which will show over 55 per cent paid in a period of four months. As to whether the company will entirely liquidate its profits or try its luck with a new photo-play, remains to be definitely decided this month.

Thanhouser Syndicate Corp. (Zudora) contracts have been closed for an amount in excess of $600,000, which definitely places this proposition among the unusual successes scored in the motion picture field.

Biograph Film Co.—There has been some demand for this stock, but the difference between the bid and asked prices is so wide that it is exceedingly difficult to effect sales.

Five hundred veterans of the civil war, through the courtesy of Thomas H. Ince, general manager of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, were the interested witnesses recently of Mr. Ince's thrilling western drama, "The Two Gun Man," at the Soldiers' Home in Sawtelle, Cal. The picture is produced in seven reels and serves to introduce in a steller capacity on the screen William S. Hart, the celebrated star of the legitimate stage.

The E. K. L. Film Company of 5 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, Ill., is handling the Illinois and Southern Wisconsin territory on the Cosmofotofilm Company's subject "Called Back," which is a four reel adaptation from the famous novel by Hugh Conway.

Hughie Mack, the fat comedian of the Vitagraph Company made an appearance in vaudeville at the Flatbush theater in Brooklyn, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, November 23, 24, and 25. His debut was greeted by a large representation of the Vitagraph Company, who gave him a hearty reception.

Harry Todd, as "Mustang Pete" in the Essanay comedy "Sophie's Sweetheart," landed a blow on "Slippery Slim's" ear, in their battle for the hand of Sophie, that left a sting. He declares that it was accidental, but "Slim" vows an accident is liable to happen to someone in their next encounter.

A. M. Gollos of Chicago has opened a branch office at 105 Temple building, Minneapolis, Minn., and will handle all his business in that territory through it. He will soon announce the release of a serial entitled "The Wanderings of Little Nemo," a subject made by the Photoplay Productions Company from the drawings of Windsor McKay.

On Tuesday, December 2, Edith Storey and Hughie Mack of the Vitagraph Company were in evidence at the Exhibitors' Ball at Boston, Mass. Hughie's impressive presence and expansive smile were notable features and Edith Storey's well earned popularity was evidenced by the recognition she received.

An exact reproduction of the Paris Bourse is being erected in the Pathe studios to be used in Bernstein's great dramatic success, "Samson" with William Farnum in the title role.

Evelyn Selbie, the Essanay western actress, has taken up dancing as a fad. She has learned all the latest steps and is as expert as a professional in all the intricate of the modern dances.

Edith Storey, the heroine in "The Island of Regeneration," made a daring swim in the Vitagraph lake last week. She was obliged to plunge into the icy water, penetrate a submerged cave and reappear after making an exploration of its different chambers. She remained under the water for more than a minute.

On Thanksgiving eve, H. A. D'Arcy, publicity man of the Lubin Company delivered a lecture to five hundred members of the National Commercial Gas Association at the Y. M. C. A. building in Philadelphia. Mr. D'Arcy described the origin, the evolution and development of photo motion. The audience gave earnest attention to the speech and rewarded the reader with considerable applause. After the lecture Mr. D'Arcy, by request, read his famous poem "The Face Upon The Floor."

Edwin August, who recently joined the Kinetophote as star actor and producer, with the aid of Mary Pickford, of the Famous Players, her mother Mrs. Pickford, Ormi Hawley, of the Lubin Company, Pearl White, of "The Perils of Pauline" fame, and Jean Acker formerly of the Imp-Universal Company, were responsible for the accumulation of quite a large sum of money at the Screen Club Ball, which took place at the Hotel Astor on Thanksgiving eve. It is the intention of Mr. August to turn over the money to the Belgian relief fund, who furnished him with a half a dozen small banks which were in the shape of barrels.

Cissy Fitz-Gerald of the Vitagraph players has at last yielded to the importunities of the insurance agent and taken out a $20,000 policy for the protection against accident to her famous wink. The present European war is primarily the cause of Miss Fitz-Gerald's taking out the insurance, as she wishes to make ample provision for her aged mother, who is in England, and cannot be moved. As her educated eye is the principal asset of the popular comedienne, she does not consider the amount of the policy exorbitant.

Tom Ricketts, one of the "Flying A" directors, has been engaged in producing another mission story on the order of "The Trail of the Lost Chord."

Lillian Walker, of the Vitagraph players, claims to have more sisters, brothers, cousins, aunts and uncles than any other motion picture artist appearing in front of the camera. Now that the holiday season is at hand, every mail brings her a new bunch of relatives, some of whom she wishes she were acquainted with.

Walter Belasco, character man of the New York Motion Picture Corporation's California studio, has invested in a couple of lots at San Francisco. For many years he has yearned to own a part of a certain section in the Bay City, and his wish recently was gratified.

Carlyle Blackwell has a splendid company working in "The Last Chapter" under the direction of Willliam D. Taylor. Ruth Hartman, who was in "The Man Who Could Not Lose," plays the principal female role, and Mrs. Pratt and Ollie Kirby are also in the cast. John J. Sheahan, Henry Kernan, William Brunton and several other good actors are appearing and the camera work is in the hands of Homer Scott, the man who is not afraid to take a chance and who produces some wonderful effects. The company is in the country taking some of the big African scenes this week.

Ed. J. Le Saint of the Selig Polyscope Company has finished his big Indian mystery story and is now making a two-reel backwoods drama, "Loneliness," in which Stella Razeto has a very appealing part.

Francelia Billington, Majestic star, turning the crank for Director W. C. Cabanne.

Henry Otto of the American gave a great treat to twelve nuns and one hundred orphan children last week, when he had them to the studio and explained to them how pictures were made, finally running off "Beppo," in which two of the children had appeared and in which the grounds of the St. Vincent's school in Santa Barbara, Calif., were shown.

Harry Pollard, of the "Beauty" films, is deep into his interesting picture, "The Quest," for which story a big price was paid by the American people. This four reeler, Mr. Pollard feels, will be one of his best artistic efforts and will give the new features at the American a big send-off.

The first moving picture company to go to Banning, Calif., took possession last week, and the town is theirs. Hobart Bosworth and a company of twenty-five are putting on some lively western scenes for the opening reel of Charles E. Van Loan's "Message to Buckshot John," and everyone in town is taking a great interest.

John Burnham & Co. announce that at a special meeting of the Board of Directors of the Syndicate Film Corporation, held in New York City, December 1, an extra dividend of 25% was declared on both the preferred and common, payable December 10 to stock of record December 7. This makes extra cash dividends of 53% which have been declared on both classes of stock this year, over and above the regular 7% dividend. This means that the original purchasers of this stock, after the payment of above dividend, will have received in the seven months in which the Syndicate Film Company has been in existence, $113 in cash dividends for each $100 invested. The cash working capital of the company after the payment of the above dividend, is over $200,000 in excess of all bills and accounts payable, or at the rate of $67 per share for stock outstanding.

Which Ham Is Schnappsmeier's—Selig—December 4.—A Selig farce comedy which deals with the rapid passage of a ham, purchased at a butcher shop by a customer, from one character in the picture to another. Heinie Schnappsmeier buys a ham, has it stolen from him by a tramp, who passes it along to another individual, who has lost a ham that looks just like it. Meanwhile the butcher sets out in pursuit of the ham, and the two hams get all mixed up, but eventually are restored to their respective owners.

Bunny's Little Brother—Vitagraph—(Two Reels)—December 5.—Bunny refuses to diet and grows fatter and fatter. His wife, determined that he shall reduce weight, sends him to a sanatarium, where he has some very distressing experiences. Meanwhile Bunny meets his long lost brother Joe and sends him to his wife, who mistakes him for Bunny with ludicrous consequences. Mrs. Bunny believes her husband must have been driven insane, but when she speaks to the doctor at the sanatarium about the change in Bunny, the doctor decides she is crazy. He eventually shows her her husband still in the sanatarium and explanations follow all around. On the same reel is a scenic, 500 feet in length, entitled, "Flowery California."

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

Just a Kid—Biograph—December 7.—Jim and Bill, rivals for the hand of Alice, start for a barn dance. En route they see a tramp thrashing a small boy and Jim interferes, rescues the lad and takes him home, while Bill, afraid of spoiling his clothes, looks on at the fight and later takes Alice to the dance, explaining that Jim was drunk and could not come. Alice later, on several occasions, snubs Jim and visiting his home to "make up" is frightened by the tramp and takes refuge in the barn, which later is set afire by ashes from the tramp's pipe. Jim returns home, rescues Alice, explains all and the two are reconciled.

Buster Brown Causes a Commotion—Edison—December 7.—Buster, with a genius for practical jokes, spreads glue around on the floor, where his mother's guest will be most likely to find it. The man escapes from one glue spot by walking out of his shoes only to stumble into another. Buster leads Tige and the goat into the glue and they become victims also. On the same reel:—

Crystals, Their Making, Habits and Beauty—Edison—December 7.—An educational picture, 500 feet in length, explaining the making, habits and beauty of crystals. It was taken in the Edison laboratories in Orange, N. J. C. R. C.

Sweedie and the Hypnotist—Essanay—December 7.—Sweedie is the scrub lady in the theater. She makes eyes at the stage manager and the hypnotist, and is put out of the theater for being so impertinent. Next day while she is out feeding her chickens, she falls asleep and dreams that she has been left an immense fortune by her uncle, and that the stage manager and the hypnotist are rivals for her hand. The hypnotist makes her the prima donna of the world, and uses his hypnotic influence in keeping his rival out of Sweedie's sight. Finally one day the stage manager sees his chance and pushes the hypnotist into a trunk, then locks it. The hypnotist by a few simple motions makes his escape, then lays in wait for the stage manager. Meanwhile Sweedie comes along and is in the act of caressing the hypnotist when she awakes and finds a goat in her lap instead of her ideal.

The Price of Silence—Kalem—(Two Reels)—December 7.—Trouble fostered by Bill Leets, in the secret employ of a business rival, results in a strike which ruins Tom Plank, head of an industrial plant. On learning the news, Clara, Plank's fiancee, returns his ring. Tom meets and becomes interested in Barbara Ragan, who is also loved by Leets. When Tom discovers that Ragan, Barbara's father, has killed Hegel, former foreman of the factory, he demands for his silence that Barbara wed him and share the poverty she has brought upon him, for he believes that the girl through her love for Leets had a hand in his ruin. Some months later Tom regains his former wealth and Barbara's father is killed in an explosion, so he thus loses his hold upon his wife. Leets, believing that Barbara still loves him, boldly enters the Plank mansion and Barbara, thinking her husband hates her, announces her intention of leaving with Leets. At the critical moment, however, she realizes the enormity of the offense she is about to commit, and rushes back to Tom, whom she finds with his head in his arms. The two realize the depth of each other's love and are reconciled. Alice Joyce and Guy Coombs featured.

Through Desperate Hazards (13th episode of the "Beloved Adventurer" series)—Lubin—December 7.—Lord Cecil following Betty, his wife, who is being hurried away from England by Carson, a Nevada gambler, arrives at the seacoast just as Carson and Betty depart on a tramp schooner owned by Captain Lars Pieterson. Lord Cecil saves a woman from leaping off a pier and learns that she is Sarah Gray, who had been wooed by Captain Pieterson and then jilted after she had turned over all her money to him. Hiring a motor-boat, Lord Cecil sets out to overtake the schooner and manages to secure the money and return it to Sarah Gray without being discovered. Before he escapes, however, he is seen and his life is only saved by the breaking out of fire in the forward hold and the panic-stricken flight of the captain and crew. Lord Cecil discovers that Betty and Carson have been left aboard and in a duel which follows between Carson and Lord Cecil the latter manages to kill Carson. Betty and Cecil are taken from the burning schooner only a moment or two before the vessel blows up. Arthur V. Johnson and Lottie Briscoe featured.

In Dutch—KALEM—DECEMBER 8.—Bill Jones, at a prize fight in a barn on the outskirts of the town, gets into a mix-up with his friend Walker, in which the latter is thrown out of the place. When Walker summons the sheriff Jones escapes. Bill brings home with him Tom Smith, the referee, who had only escaped from the raid by jumping out of the window. When the sheriff follows them to Bill's home, Bill imitates a woman's voice and so fools the officer. When Mrs. Jones investigates the strange voice Bill tells her he is rehearsing a part for a play to be given by his lodge and, after many other narrow escapes, gets Jones out of the house and breathes a long sigh of relief. John Brennan featured.

The Mystery of the Seven Chests—SELIG—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 7.—A mysterious man places seven chests in a storage vault, and fifteen years later his sister, who has received a long-delayed letter, comes to claim them. Belmont, a society favorite, buys the chests as a novelty and is followed by a girl named Rose when he takes them to his summer cottage. The husband of the mystery man's sister and his gang also follow and many thrilling scenes lead up to a denouement which is certain to surprise any audience. A complete review will be found on page 767 of the December 5 issue.

The Moonshine Maid and the Man—VITAGRAPH—DECEMBER 7.—Dave, in love with Nancy, a mountain girl, is told that she will marry him when he has $1,000. Later, seeing a reward of $1,000 for the capture of moonshiners in that county, Dave determines to secure the reward, not knowing that Nancy's father, Job, operates the still. Job breaks his leg and Nancy, dressed in his clothes, goes to the still and is seen by Dave, who brings the sheriff. In a bitter fight which occurs there Dave is fatally shot. Helen Gardner and Henry Golden featured.

Cousin Pons—BIOGRAPH—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 8.—Sylvain Pons, a collector of rare art objects, goes to call on his relatives, the De Marvilles. He takes with him as a gift a genuine Watteau fan, once the property of Madame Pompadour. Cecile De Marville, thinking her cousin poor, snubs him cruelly, being encouraged in this by her mother. Monsieur De Marville, returning home, sees Pons' plight and rebukes his daughter and wife for their treatment of him, declaring that Pons has a rich friend who might become engaged to Cecile. Accordingly Pons is treated much better and every effort is made to win the admiration of Brunner, his wealthy friend. Later Brunner offers to buy Pons' art collection which is worth many millions, and so Madame Cibot, the housekeeper, learns of his wealth. Anxious to become wealthy, Cecile offers Madame Cibot a big reward if she will arrange that Pons, who is very ill, dies without making a will. To accomplish this Madame Cibot attempts to poison him and Cecile one day steals his will and is about to replace it with a blank sheet of paper when her treachery is discovered, and to avoid being imprisoned, she poisons herself. Pons later dies in the arms of his faithful friend, Schmucke, to whom he has left his fortune.

The Rose at the Door—EDISON—DECEMBER 8.—In this third issue of the "Olive's Opportunities" series, Boggs, a thief who has secured a position as butler in the home of General Coleman, overhears the general tell his son, Vance, that in case he should die without heirs, the Coleman fortune would go to Drew Martin, his nephew. Boggs, by his power over Martin, compels the latter to plan to obtain the Coleman money. Martin and Vance go to a house party at Madame Forresti's country home. Vance takes with him Olive, a gypsy girl whom he has met. Laura, Madame Forresti's protege, is jealous of Olive, but Martin tells her of his plan to obtain the fortune and promises to share it with her. That night Laura leaves a rose in front of Vance's door, as a signal to the thugs, showing them where Vance is lodged. Olive shifts the rose to Martin's door and the thugs carry off the wrong man. Martin manages to make himself known just as the thugs are about to cast him into the river. Next morning Vance appears at breakfast alive and well. Mabel Trunnelle featured.

Mrs. Trenwith Comes Home—ESSANAY—DECEMBER 8.—Mrs. Trenwith is a shallow society woman. Her husband is wrapped up in business, and as a result their little daughter, Marjory, suffers greatly from neglect. Her old nurse, Fanchette loves her dearly. Mr. Trenwith leaves town on a business trip, while his wife goes to a house party, where she meets Ralph Eccles, a typical society tempter. She leads him on. Shortly after she receives a telegram that Marjory is ill and asks for her constantly. She thinks nothing of the message, and makes no preparation to leave. Then her conscience begins to work and she dashes for the first train home, only to find Marjory unconscious. Eccles follows her and insists upon seeing her. For the first time she tells him that she is a married woman and refuses to see him. Mr. Trenwith arrives just in time to see the child open her eyes, and for the first time they realize what selfish creatures they are.

Dobs at the Shore—LUBIN—DECEMBER 8.—Jemula Heckla and his wife are spending the day at the sea-shore, where Helen Marten, a beautiful heiress, escorted by Count Gasco, is preparing for a dip in the ocean. While the count is gone to buy Helen an ice cream cone, Mrs. Heckla falls asleep and Jem starts to flirt with Helen. Here departing Jem makes a dummy out of the sand, places it at his wife's side and then sneaks off. The count returns just as Jem is attempting to kiss Helen and as a result of the fight which follows Mrs. Heckla is awakened. Snatching a revolver, she sets out after her husband and the count, and for a time much excitement reigns along the shore. The picture ends with the cops arresting the count for attempted suicide and Mrs. Heckla marching Jem homeward.

He Made His Marks—LUBIN—DECEMBER 8.—Hank Peters simply could not help kissing pretty girls and his wife, though suspicious, had never been able to catch him in the act. Reading of the use of thumb prints for detective work, she wonders if it will not work as well with lip prints. When Hank kisses her before going to work she develops the print with some powder, and with this as a sample, finds that Hank had kissed both the maid and the cook. Visiting his office she discovers that his stenographer is simply covered with marks, and as a result poor Hank has to fight not only the stenographer's brother, but the husky beaux of the various maids and other servants whom he has kissed, besides squaring things with his wife. George Welch featured.

Saved by a Watch—SELIG—DECEMBER 8.—Effective acting and thrilling incidents mingle in this film of western life. Tom Mix has the leading male role and performs several seemingly impossible "stunts," which will hold the interest of any audience. A stage coach topples over in one scene and rolls down an embankment. Alice returns from school as the story opens and is greeted by her lover, Tom, who owns the stage line. Heffron, a worthless fellow, is jealous of Tom but dares not openly attack him. When some money is shipped by stage Heffron sees a chance to get Tom out of the way and at the same time secure some cash. With two pals he holds up the coach and when the horses run away the vehicle rolls down a hill. Tom is saved from being killed by one of Heffron's bullets when it hits a watch which Alice brought him from the east and which he has in his pocket. The sheriff's posse arrive in time to effect a rescue. C.J.C.

Sunshine and Shadows—VITAGRAPH—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 8.—John Gates, a dishonest bank employee, is able to have Martin Drew, engaged to Helen Redmond, wrongfully accused of theft in the bank where the two work. Helen breaks off her engagement and Martin, discouraged, goes to a distant city after his trial. There he meets Edna Thompson and marries her, after she has told him her life's history with its dark spots and questionable associations. They secure a small farm to work on shares and are very happy for a time. Gates, the dishonest cashier, is eventually detected in this thefts and before being taken to jail, confesses to the bank director that Martin was not guilty of the previous theft. Accordingly Martin is hunted up and reinstalled in his old position, though Helen is furious when she learns that he is married. For a time all goes well and then Helen manages to learn of Edna's past and forces her to go away by threatening to reveal it. Edna, for Martin's sake, goes away, though he is furious on learning of her departure. He curses Helen and follows his wife back to the country where a reunion occurs. Norma Talmadge and Gladden James featured.

A Matter of High Explosives—Edison—December 9.—Mr. Leonard, a young chemist, invents a remarkable explosive, so powerful that a small amount would demolish an entire village. His wife, nervous from the presence of the explosive in the house, worries over it night and day and, being subject to sleepwalking, that night she visits the laboratory, secures a bomb which she finds on the table and journeys all over the village. She is seen by several villagers and Mr. Leonard is summoned. He eventually finds her atop a telegraph pole and about to drop the bomb. He climbs the pole and manages to take it from her. By threatening to drop the bomb himself he causes the villagers to flee, thus giving him an opportunity to take Mrs. Leonard home without being observed. Arriving at home, he ties her into bed, thereby assuring himself against further disturbances.

"The Fable of the Bush-League Lover Who Failed to Qualify."—Essanay—December 9.—Homer Splivens was a loud noise among the boys, but with the girls he was the dampest bomb ever dropped from an airship. He very seldom went to see a girl, but it wasn't his fault, they refused to make dates with him. Finally he saw Lucy Livingston and fell for her. He didn't have the nerve to ask her to call on her, although he was just dying to. He read the lives of all the lady killers to see how they got away with it, then called on Lucy. He tried to tell her his love, but he flattened out like a dying welsh rarebit. He then decided to study the actions of the more modern wooers like the movie idol, Francis X. Bushman. He also had an interview with Jack Thompson, who was an awful hit with the women. The next expedition for the capture of Lucy started out with flying colors. He forgot what Jack Thompson said about faint heart never copping out fair lady, so switched to the Bushman system. Just then father entered the room and Homer couldn't be seen for dust. Moral: It has to be done in just a certain way.

The Mystery of the Yellow Sunbonnet—Kalem—(Two Reels)—December 9.—George Cathcart, a naval officer, arrives home on a leave of absence. On the next estate lives Maynard, a foreign spy, who plots with Jessica, an adventuress, to secure the maps in Cathcart's possession. Jessica contrives to become the guest of George's mother, but George becomes suspicious of her and hides the maps behind a secret panel, so that when Jessica searches his desk she obtains worthless maps. George has seen a yellow sunbonnet in the hall of Maynard's residence and when Jessica loses a paper which bears the words "the yellow sun bonnet" Cathcart becomes suspicious, visiting the Maynard home discovers that the peg on which the sunbonnet hangs is hollow and contains the maps Jessica had stolen. Later both Jessica and Maynard learn the hiding place of the real maps, in Cathcart's home, and when Maynard attempts to secure them, George surprises him. When Maynard attempts to shoot the naval officer Jessica leaps forward and receives the bullet intended for George. Maynard escapes and Jessica later becomes George's wife. Alice Hollister featured.

A Recent Confederate Victory—Lubin—(Two Reels)—December 9.—Robert Williams, an old negro, returns to the place of his youth in old Virginia. He arrives to find his former "young master," Clay Fairfax, now a middle-aged invalid, almost in poverty, while the great estate has fallen to ruin. Fairfax's daughter, Louise, is about to sacrifice herself for her father by marrying a rich youth, thus giving up Ned Ferry, whom she loves, but who is as poor as themselves. Old William recalls that back in '65 his old master had hidden certain documents in an iron box just before the Union troops arrived. He visits the garden and there finds the box still hidden away. Silas Gregg, a money lender, also knows of the lost fortune and offers to buy the Fairfax estate in the hope of finding it. William tells him of his discovery with the understanding that Gregg is to give him half of the bonds if he can buy the place. Gregg offers $20,000 cash for the estate, which is enough to bring comfort to Fairfax and happiness to Louise, and William then leads him to the treasure and departs. Gregg, gloating over the bonds, discovers that they are all issued by the Confederate government and consequently worthless. He then realizes that he has been trapped. Bartley McCullum featured.

The Abyss — Selig — December 9. — Strong emotional acting by Bessie Eyton and a virile character portrayal by Thomas Santschi, coupled with a story of no little strength make this production one worthy of booking by any exhibitor. A thrill is injected into the last scenes, when the leading characters leap over a cliff. If substitions were made in this incident they were handled so cleverly that this reviewer did not notice them. The plot deals with the life of a man and woman who live together, though not bound by marriage. The man's father wants him to return home but the man refuses and instead leads the woman to the mountains to fight off their fondness for liquor together. There he falls in love with a sincere girl and attempts to leave the woman. She clings to him, however, and they go to their death together. C.J.C.

The Athletic Family—Vitagraph—December 9.—Jake Punchim, a retired heavyweight champion, insists that his wife and twin daughters, Helen and Dot, engage in daily athletic exercises. Dot, who hates boxing, meets and flirts with Gussie Wendell, who does not like boxing either, and arranges to meet him at the park next day at two. Helen meets Billy Banghim, a husky boxing instructor, and asks permission to box one of his pupils. She soon knocks her opponent out and Billy falls in love with her on the spot and arranges to meet her at the park next day at two. Through mistaken identity the two girls meet the wrong men and the misunderstanding results in both Billy and Gussie being ducked in the lake. Pa Punchim, out for a walk, assists in lifting a wagon out of a rut, picks up a piano single-handed and sets it on a wagon and does other little stunts. Arriving at the park Pa Punchim is just in time to straighten out matters between the mixed up couples. All then enjoy a hearty laugh. William Shea, Edna and Alice Nash featured.

For Her People—Biograph—December 10.—The young queen of Barsonia, wearied, goes with Mathilde, her maid, incognito to a neighboring city and resides there in a small apartment. She becomes acquainted with a handsome young art student who lives across the way. She is delighted, upon her return to the castle, to have this young art student call upon her, he having learned that she is the queen. The queen learns that the heir apparent is a profligate young man and during her absence he had levied a heavy tax upon the people. She arranges to remedy these things and one day while driving with the young art student, who has grown to love her, she witnesses one of the prince's carousals and realizing the fate of the realm in his hands, gives up her dream of love and sacrifices her own happiness for the welfare of her people.

"Sophie's Sweetheart" — ESSANAY — DECEMBER 10.—Slippery Slim and Mustang Pete are suitors for the hand of Sophie Clutts, but she cares nothing for either of them, she is in love with another man. Hiram Clutts and his wife quarrel as to which one Sophie shall marry, Hiram prefers Mustang, while his wife insists upon Slim being the favored one. Sophie's choice is unknown to them. Hiram sends out notices to the effect that Sophie is to marry Mustang. His wife announces the marriage of Slim and Sophie. While Sophie's parents are in the discussion about her future husband, she has written a note to her sweetheart, telling him to get the minister and when she arrives she will marry him. Meanwhile Slim and Mustang engage in a fistic encounter and both are badly battered. They go to Sophie's home where they find her happy in the arms of her husband. Mustang and Slim then shake hands and go in search of something else to fight about.

The Man from the Sea—LUBIN—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 10.—Carroll Brown and Bradley Wolf, both rich young men, are suitors for the hand of Marjory Sheppard. Believing that were one out of the way the other would stand a better chance of winning the girl, the two men go to Wolf's wireless station to play poker. Wolf cheats and Brown leaves to board his yacht. Later that night Brown finds himself locked in a cabin of his yacht and the boat set afire. He calls Wolf on the wireless, asking for aid, but Wolf refuses and Brown wires him back that he knows he was cheated and that he will be with him on his wedding night. Next morning they find the beach strewn with wreckage, positive proof that the yacht went down. Wolf and Marjory set a date for their wedding and Wolf time and again receives the message from Brown, "I will be with you on your wedding night." On his wedding night, Wolf goes to the wireless station and is amazed to have Brown appear before him, sodden and soaked, his clothes rotten and intertwined with sea-moss. The two men face each other, the living and the dead, and Brown tells Wolf that he can never marry Marjory, but agrees to give him one more chance. Marjory, meanwhile, becoming impatient, takes her auto and goes to meet Wolf. The machine, however, skids and plunges over the sea-wall into the ocean and the half drowned chauffeur is all that comes back from the depths of the sea. Wolf, driven insane by the news, blows out his brains. Kempton Greene, Earle Metcalfe and Anna Luther featured.

Pure Gold—VITAGRAPH—DECEMBER 10.—Stranded in Yellow City, Helen Cross, a dancer, is compelled to accept an engagement with the town saloon-keeper as a bar-room singer. Later becoming disgusted with the rough miners, she wanders away into the hills and seeks refuge for the night at a lonely cabin. The lone miner, whose home it is, welcomes her and the next day when she is about to depart he gets her to tell her story. She does so and he, not realizing her sterling character, attempts familiarities, which she resents. He grows to respect her and when he is stricken with fever next day she remains to care for him. He recovers and the two become fast friends. The girl helps him work his gold claim and eventually discovers a pocket containing many good sized nuggets of gold. Thinking to surprise him, she hides them and he for a time suspects her of attempting to rob him, but eventually all is explained and he realizes that her character is like the nuggets—pure gold. Anne Schaefer and William Duncan featured.

And She Never Knew—BIOGRAPH—DECEMBER 11.—On the day her brother went away she made him promise to return on her birthday. On that occasion she had decorated the old home and prepared a feast, but her brother never came. With the passing years she always prepared a feast and decorated the house on her birthday, in the hope that some day her brother would come back, but still he never came. A tramp, learning the story, calls at her home and she mistakes him for her brother, as he expected her to. She feeds him and then conducts him to her brother's room, where he goes to sleep. Shamed by the deception, the tramp next morning explains all by a note in which he tells the truth and then steals away. The note, however, is blown away by the wind and seeing the open window the girl is able to surmise whence the tramp has gone and to bring him back. The exposure, however, had been too much for the tramp and he dies, while she mourns him as her brother and never did she know otherwise.

The Best Man—EDISON—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 11.—George Hayne, leaving Europe, cables Cecilia Jefferson, his American fiancee, that by marrying her he is saving her family from financial ruin. The liner is late in arriving and Hayne dashes to his apartments to don his wedding clothes, at the moment that his bride is waiting at the church. A snap lock on his clothes closet results in his becoming a prisoner in the closet. Meanwhile Holman, a financial crook, has stolen an important message and Gordon, a secret service agent, is assigned to recover the message. He visits Holman's house and substitutes a bogus message for the real one. Leaving, he sees a carriage in front of Hayne's apartment and, entering it, orders the driver to proceed. The driver, thinking him Hayne, takes him to the church, where Gordon, who resembles Hayne, is mistaken for the latter and married to Cecilia. Hayne meanwhile frees himself from the clothes closet and arrives at the church only to learn that someone else has married his fiancee. Gordon and Cecilia leave on their honeymoon and are followed by a detective employed by Holman. When Gordon discovers that he is followed, he and Cecilia leave the train when an accident occurs and thus elude the officer. Gordon is appointed chief of the Foreign Secret Service Bureau at Washington for his cleverness and this good news and a rapidly acquired love makes Cecilia happy with him as her husband. Marc MacDermott and Gertrude McCoy featured.

The Bold Banditti and the Rah Rah Boys—KALEM—DECEMBER 11.—Percival Butterfingers is the butt of all the pranks played by Billy Stout and his chums, until Ralph, a freshman, arrives. Ralph and Professor Nutt overhear Billy and his chums concocting a black hand scheme and at the same time a real gang of black-handers plan to blow up Ralph's room to square a wrong committed by his wealthy father. Ralph mistakes one of the real black-handers for a student and chases him away, then picking up the sputtering bomb he throws it out of the window, where it explodes, wrecking the building and frightening Billy and his crew who have just arrived. The police arrest Billy and his chums, who are made up as a black-hand band, while the real bandits escape. Marshall Neilan featured.

On Moonshine Mountain—LUBIN—DECEMBER 11.—John Ford, a revenue officer, goes to Moonshine mountain to track illicit distillers and is accompanied by a posse of officers disguised as railroad laborers. He meets Anne, a mountain girl, with whose mother he obtains board. At her home he encounters Brice Gordon, a newspaper man, on a vacation, and who is also in love with Anne. Jake, a moonshiner, attempts to caress Anne, while drunk, and Brice saves her and wins her love. Ford tracks Jake through the woods and discovers Brice and Anne. He becomes insanely jealous and when Jake surprises him, Ford saves himself by telling Jake that Brice is a revenue officer. Jake hurries off to warn his companions and Ford follows him. He is seen, however, and chased by the mountaineers. Ford runs for Anne's home, hoping to arrive in time to ring an old bell and thus summon his posse, but before he arrives at the home he is shot by Zeb, one of the moonshiners. Brice is mistaken for a revenue officer on account of his reporter's badge and is about to be hung, but no rope being available Zeb pulls down the bell rope to use as a noose and in so doing rings the bell which summons Ford's posse. The moonshiners are captured, Brice is rescued and when he returns to the city Anne goes with him. Edgar Jones and Louise Huff featured.

One Kiss — Selig — December 11. — Colonel Pippin is angry at his son because he leads a fast life and wishes to marry a chorus girl. The colonel falls into a trap, however, when a chum of his son's sweetheart coaxes him to take her out to supper. He foots the bill and places it on the debit side of his ledger; on the credit side he enters "one kiss." A few days later he strolls into the manicure shop, which the actress' friend conducts, and his son and the girl masquerade as assistants. After greatly over-charging him for services rendered the son tells him that unless he consents to his marriage he will tell his mother of the manicurist. The son gets what he wants. The idea behind the production is good, but it has not been handled in a manner which brings it out in the best possible manner. Sid Smith, John Lancaster, Elsie Greeson, Lylllian Brown Leighton and Lillian Hayward form a clever quintet in the leading roles. A fairly amusing offering. C.J.C.

The Strand of Blond Hair—Vitagraph—December 11—A blond lady combing her hair at the window wins Artie's admiration and he manages to clip off a strand of her hair and later ties a bright ribbon around it. Dining at a restaurant some chums of his cleverly substitute some horse hair for the blond tresses and place the latter in the pocket of Bunny, who is dining at the next table. That evening instead of going home Bunny goes to the club and plays poker. When he eventually returns home he gives Flora: his wife, his winnings to quiet her objections to his late hours. Suspicious of his generosity, Flora investigates and finds the golden tresses. Thoroughly exasperated, Flora sets out the next day and attempts to match it with the hair of every blonde she meets. That day Bunny meets Artie and eventually blondy, and on leaving the restaurant together they encounter Flora, who now not only sees the blonde whose hair corresponds with the tresses, but with her husband. Explanations follow and Bunny has to buy his wife a bouquet to square himself. Phyllis Grey and Jay Dwiggins featured.

Diogenes Weekly No. 13—Biograph—December 12.—Diogenes with his lantern and a motion picture camera, sets out to secure some "topical stuff." He obtains pictures of the ambassadors from Swisscheeseovitch arriving in New York, where they get a strong reception. From Skunkville we get a view of Lady Rankwurst inspecting the town's punk police, and of Audrey and Beryl Van Hittingthepipe, two millionaire children, at play. At Painted Post, Ohio, "Pig Iron Kelley," the new white hope, is seen training, and at Squillville, Ky., "Hightower Jimmy," the daring steeplejack, falls several thousand feet into the arms of a passer-by.

The Stenographer—Edison—December 12.—Gertrude Sawyer supports herself and an invalid sister on her wages as a stenographer of a large corporation. Charles Hardin, her employer, is anxious to crush Joe Elbert, a business rival, and arranges that Gertrude shall quit his employ and secure a similar position with Elbert. She realizes that she is to spy on Elbert and keep Hardin informed of his business secrets. She dislikes to be dishonest, though she realizes that she will lose her position if she rebels. Gertrude and Elbert fall in love with each other and when Gertrude remonstrates with Hardin for making her act as his spy, Elbert overhears them and arranges to give Gertrude false information, which she conveys to Hardin, thereby ruining him. Gertrude, not knowing that Elbert has played a trick, confesses to him and is surprised when he tells her he knew all about it all the time. The picture ends with Gertrude and Elbert planning their wedding and her invalid sister well on the way to health. Gertrude McCoy featured.

"Broncho Billy's Dad"—Essanay—December 12. — When Broncho Billy leaves home to take the office of sheriff, his dad's parting words are, "My boy, no matter what happens, do your duty." Shortly after his father has a quarrel with a surveyor who refuses to stop trespassing on his property. Broncho's dad shoots him. The wounded man's pal then rushes to Broncho Billy's office and demands that he arrest his father. After some hesitation Broncho remembers his father's parting words and decides to do his duty. When he goes to his home the old man threatens to shoot him, but is prevented by his mother. He at last consents to go to jail. After locking him safely in a cell, Broncho resigns as sheriff. Meanwhile, the wounded surveyor has regained consciousness and writes a note to Broncho, telling him that his father fired in self defense. Bronch is overjoyed and hastens to the jail, where he breaks the glad news to his dad.

Saved by Their Chee-ild—Biograph—December 12.—Old Lockstep wishes his daughter to marry Richard Rosin, who has promised that when the wedding takes place he will rob a couple of banks and so make them all wealthy. The girl loves Clarence and sends for him that they may elope. After an exciting chase the elopers are captured and old Lockstep summons a minister and is about to force his daughter to marry Rosin, when Clarence rushes in and denounces Rosin as a married man. Clarence gets the girl and their marriage takes place immediately. On the same reel:—

The Flying Freight's Captive—Kalem—December 12.—Another of the "Hazards of Helen" series in which Helen Holmes is featured. When Melville, a conductor, is discharged because of a jewel theft aboard his train and Helen is given a cypher message to send over the wire by Rand, a yeggman, the girl accidentally discovers the message refers to the jewel robbery and trails Rand to a cave, where he and Flint, a confederate, are hiding. While Flint departs to meet Houk a "fence" Rand discovers Helen spying on him and makes her a prisoner in a box car. Melville and the detective appear at Lone Point where the robbery occurred and after managing to loosen her bonds Helen wrests the revolver from Rand, wounds him, jumps from the train and makes her her way to Lone Point where she reports what has happened. Flint and the "fence" are captured and Helen is rewarded for her pluck.

Sam and the Bully—Lubin—December 12.—Sam, while not a coward, lacks confidence in himself and allows Bill, his rival, to lick him. Both are in love with Mattie, a laundress. Sam sees an advertisement of the Courage Corporation, which teaches bravery by mail, and sends $5.00 for the course of training. All he gets for his money is the assurance that he can kill Bill if he wants to. Sam is so peeved over wasting his money that he really grows furious and meeting Bill, chases the latter up a tree and proves that he can lick him. Sam, now a conqueror, wins the love of Mattie, while Bill is led away. Sam decides that perhaps after all he was not swindled.

The Fresh Air Cure—Lubin—December 12.—Tony is advised by Mr. Strong, a fresh air enthusiast, to sleep out doors, but having no sleeping porch he is forced to set up his bed in the street, much to the disgust of Anne, his daughter. Anne elopes with Issy Silverstein, the son of his enemy. Tony and Izzy's father both give chase but the young people escape and Tony returns to bed. Izzy and Anne are safely married and return home for the parental blessing just in time to see Tony's open air bedroom hit by an automobile. Rushing to the wreck they rescue Tony and receive his blessing.

The Soul Mate—Selig—December 12.—This is another of the quiet, human interest stories of every day people which are typical of the Selig Company. The acting is delightfully human and, while none of the Selig stars appear in the cast, all the leads do their work well. The entire production is one of merit. Sally, a laundry girl, is told by a palmist that the man who is her soulmate likes purple. She is loved by Dan, who drives the laundry wagon, but because he likes red she rejects him. She places a note in a bundle of purple shirts saying that the owner is her soul mate. A friend of Gordon West's, owner of the shirts, finds the note and meets Sally. When she discovers that his intentions are evil, she places another note in the bundle, asking him not to see her again. West finds it and chastises the cad. Then he tells Sally to forget all about soul mates and she shows her willingness to do it by giving Dan a red tie for a birthday present and promising to be his wife. C.J.C.

How to Do It and Why—Vitagraph—(Two Reels)—December 12.—Butt-in, the book agent, makes the acquaintance of Jack Sportington and his college chums. Jack is in love with Rose Woods, whose mother does not approve of him. They arrange a little party and write Jack's uncle, a spiritualist, for money, telling him it is to defray the expense of a seance. Uncle is delighted to learn that his nephew has become a spiritualist and not only sends the money, but comes himself. The boys are having a fine time when uncle arrives and with the assistance of Butt-in they fake up a seance, which is exposed by Mrs. Woods. All manage to escape except Butt-in and he eventually frees himself after interesting Mrs. Woods in his new book on hypnotism. Uncle is infatuated with Mrs. Woods and eventually Butt-in becomes interested in her, too. Rose and Butt-in manage to place uncle in such an embarrassing position that he quickly consents to Buttin's marriage to Mrs. Woods, and Jack and Rose are free for love making of their own. Harry Morey, Wally Van and Cissy Fitzgerald featured.

Mutual Program

The Center of the Web—THANHOUSER—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 1.—John Linton, a member of the secret service, and Ida Dean, one of a band of counterfeiters, meet at a social function and are attracted to each other. George Morley, the counterfeiter chief, learns of their attachment and commands Ida to break with Linton, but she refuses. Later the girl becomes jealous of the detective's attentions to old Simms and his daughter, Marjorie, and joins Morley in a plot to implicate the couple in their counterfeiting operations. One day while strolling in the country near a suburban police station, Linton comes upon the headquarters of the counterfeiters, and is captured. With the aid of police dogs the policemen trail him, and arrive just as Ida Dean saves Linton's life from the infuriated Morley. As a reward for protecting the secret service man Ida is freed by the court, as are Simms and his daughter, when it is found that they are only the victims of a plot.

Mutual Weekly No. 101—MUTUAL—DECEMBER 2.—This issue shows the annual gridiron battle between Stanford and California Universities, the burning of the Sunset grain elevator at Galveston, Texas, views of seals from the Pribilof Islands, and in the war sections close up views of the British Lancers, the Senegalese sharpshooters leaving camp for the front, and a picture showing how England is training her soldiers for actual fighting conditions.

The Old Maid — MAJESTIC — (TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 3.—Quaint old Dorothy, rummaging in an old chest in the attic of her home, comes upon remembrances of the old days. She sees visions of the days of her youth, and again lives through her romance with Benjie, and the scene in which a few angry words from one and the unyielding pride of the other separate them forever. Old Maid Dorothy loved but one, and he became the husband of another. As years pass Benjie, now a successful business man, grows old, wrinkled, and crabbed while gentle, sweet-faced Dorothy retains her beauty and kindliness, and is content in her faithfulness to her lost love.

The Creator of "Hunger"—PRINCESS—DECEMBER 4.—John Boyd, a penniless young artist, paints a masterpiece entitled "Hunger." Ethel Stewart, his fiance, insists that Boyd discharge his model, but he refuses. She then accepts the attentions of George Randolph who is envious of Boyd's wonderful picture. When his rival is taken ill Randolph seizes "Hunger," and exhibits it as his own work. Boyd learns of it, but his protestations are thought to be merely ravings caused by his high fever. He is listened to, however, when his pleas are backed by the testimony of the the old man and girl who posed for the picture and he receives the prize purse, which was to have been given to Randolph. His interest in Mayre, the model, ripens into affection, and this in time culminates in their marriage.

Naidra, the Dream Woman—THANHOUSER—DECEMBER 4.—An old scientist, working for years in an effort to discover the secret of human life, finally succeeds and creates a beautiful woman whom he names Naidra. She is wholly incapable of giving or receiving love until she meets a young organist friend of the scientist's. Their affection is mutual, and the young fellow is inspired to play as he never played before. The old man, who is also one of Naidra's admirers, is broken-hearted at this. When the lovers are about to kiss he rushes forward and then—awakens. It was only a dream.

Sherman Was Right—It's Very Trying—ROYAL — DECEMBER 5.— Sherman's opinion of war is vividly portrayed in this thrilling war between the armies of the married and unmarried men of the country. One of the couriers shows an unusual burst of speed by delivering a war message in twenty years flat. Battles are called off at five-thirty sharp on week-days, one o'clock on Saturdays, and tabooed entirely on Sundays, which is a day of recuperation. The bloody strife is interrupted by the wives of the married men, and peace is declared.

The Amateur Detective—THANHOUSER—DECEMBER 6.—Jack's hieroglyphic correspondence with Betty inspires Pat, the maid's sweetheart-policeman, with the idea that he has discovered a deep and villainous plot against Jane's employer, Mr. Wise, on whose fence signs are chalked. Jack thinks to improve on Pat's "discovery" by masquerading as a detective, and subduing the operations of a fictitious black-hand band, but Pat jumps into the scheme before it is ripe and exposes the young fellow. Mr. Wise takes an optimistic view of the affair, and allows Jack to marry Betty.

His Prehistoric Past—KEYSTONE—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 7.—Weakchin, the tramp, falls asleep on a park bench, and presently is dreaming of the days of his prehistoric past. He finds himself in an ancient kingdom, flirting with one of the favorites of the king. Presently he is set upon by Cleo, the king's fool. The king arrives and the fighting becomes hilariously funny. In the end Weakchin and the king becomes great friends, but the king's jealousy of Weakchin's attentions to his favorite makes trouble. Weakchin throws the ruler over the cliff, and reigns as king himself. The old monarch, rescued by Cleo, returns, and beats Weakchin over the head. The tramp wakes to find a policeman clubbing him and suggesting that he move on.

Our Mutual Girl—CHAPTER 47 RELIANCE—DECEMBER 7.—Margaret meets Douglas Fairbanks, the famous actor now starring in "He Comes Up Smiling," on her way to the Yale-Princeton football game, and rides with him for quite a distance. Arriving at Princeton she and Hamilton are escorted about the campus by Aaron Burr Edwards. Hamilton discovers that he has lost his tickets, and Edwards secures them excellent seats, taking particular pains to see that he occupies one beside Margaret. After the game he offers to show his guests the "Westminster Abbey of America," and takes them directly to the grave of his ancestor, Aaron Burr. Hamilton loses his self-control at this affront, and the couple are soon scuffling and struggling about on the ground. In a flash the historic scene of the duel between Aaron Burr and Alexander Hamilton on Weehauken Heights darts before our Mutual Girl's vision. Margaret intervenes, and finally succeeds in pacifying her escort.

The Reader of Minds—THANHOUSER—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 7.—The keynote of this story is a new one. Its practicability is a second consideration. It was in the construction of the plot, in its production, and will be in the minds of the spectators because of its originality. The story is of a pschological machine that photographs the thoughts passing through one's mind. A drama of army life is the setting for this idea, and, assuming that this mind-reading machine be a possibility, one will find it tensely interesting and "different." A young army officer invents a wonderful electrical device that can destroy battleships within a certain radius. While talking to a foreign spy thoughts of his invention are aroused in his mind, and photographed by a machine whose lens protrudes through the wall of an adjoining room. The government tries him for treason, but releases him when the truth of how the plans were obtained becomes known.

Limping to Happiness—BEAUTY—DECEMBER 8.—Afton Mineer, Kathie Fischer and Joseph Harris have the leads in this comedy, which deals with a lover's quarrel and the unique manner in which it is patched up. Toward the close it is very humorous without at any time, however, wavering from the high plane which it assumes at the opening. The scenery and photography are of the usual high class quality for which this company is noted. May and John are hopelessly in love with each other. A dancing party gives occasion for a fit of jealousy and the strong bonds of love seem to be torn asunder with a recklessness and ease that is almost as incredible as it is customary. A bit of strategy, via the sprained ankle route, on the part of both lovers with the family physician as an earnest conspirator and May's little sister capping the climax, winds up the unhappy affair with a snap and vigor that does them all good. C.J.C.

Her Brave Hero—Majestic—December 8.—To prevent Gay's attending a Bal Masque Mrs. Gay pours some sleeping powder into his decanter of whiskey, thinking that he will surely imbibe before leaving the house. Under normal circumstances he probably would, but when he finds Hogan, the maid's fiance and one of the law's representatives, in a dead sleep he suspects the decanter of treachery, and leaves it alone. Unable to find his costume he appropriates Hogan's uniform, and attends the ball. During his absence a burglar invades the house, helps himself to the decanter's contents, and follows Hogan's example. Mrs. Gay is angry on discovering that her husband has attended the ball in spite of her scheme, but changes to sweetness the next morning on seeing "her brave hero" standing with one foot on the captured burglar's neck.

The Girl in Question—American—December 9.—The material from which this play was built, while not exactly new, is most entertaining and despite the rather ineffective handling of scene construction the production is almost certain to prove popular wherever it is shown. William Garwood, Vivian Rich, Jack Richardson and Louise Lester have the leads and their acting is one of the delights of the film, photography and settings being the other "high spots." The story tells of an old-fashioned mother's desire to have her son married to a girl whom he has known since childhood. The young man, however, is led to the bright lights by a friend and becomes fascinated by an adventuress. His mother determines upon a plan to bring him to his senses and follows him to a cafe one night, where she acts just as his friends do. A short time later she invites her son's fast friends to their home and drinks and smokes with them. The boy is disgusted and goes to the girl, as she is the only one who he thinks has acted respectable. His mother is happy at the result, despite the price she paid for it. C.J.C.

The City of Darkness—Broncho—(Two Reels) — December 9. — John Warner, the newly elected governor, had while serving as district attorney sent Horgan's son to the electric chair. Later a murder is committed in Horgan's saloon, and, to even his score with the governor, the saloonkeeper testifies falsely against young Donald Warner who was present at the time of the killing. At 11:45 on the night on which Donald is to be executed Horgan tells the governor that his brother is innocent of the crime, thinking that John cannot prevent the execution because the telephone wires have been cut. The saloonkeeper's attempt to thus torture the executive proves a failure, for the latter rushes to the power house, and has the current turned off, plunging the whole city in darkness. Donald is already strapped in the chair, but when the apparatus fails to work is returned to his cell, and later freed.

The Forest Thieves—Reliance—December 9.—Asa Hatch, a multi-millionaire, and Anson Slade, supervisor of a forest reserve in Wyoming, co-operate in a plan to "legitimately" steal timber land from the government. Hatch has never met Slade, their transactions all being through the mail. The financial pirate travels to Bisonville to meet Slade, and by mistake introduces himself to Troublesome McWhorten, showing him Slade's telegram. McWhorten, who is a forest ranger with an iron-bound code of rules regarding fair play, secretly takes up the work of defeating the land-stealing plan, and is so successful that the carefully arranged scheme of Hatch and Slade comes tumbling down about their ears without their even suspecting that it was shaky. McWhorten's reward from the government is his appointment as Slade's successor, but the reward that he values even higher is that of having Anne Keith, who helped him in his work, promise to be his wife.

Not of the Flock—Domino—(Two Reels)—December 10.—When Rod Hawley is exiled from the village he sets up a roadhouse outside of the town, and lives there with his pretty daughter, Leone. David Boylan, the town's new minister, invites the girl to a church social. Leone returns home broken-hearted, having been snubbed by all, and particularly by Edith Ainsworth. Seeing this treatment of his guest Boylan ends his courtship of the banker's daughter. Later Edith is lured to the roadhouse by a sauve city man, but is rescued from her danger by Leone. When Boylan arrives on the scene Leone, thinking the two engaged, leaves them together, but the minister hurries to overtake her and explains the situation whereupon she promises to be his wife.

The Fortunes of War—Kay Bee—(Two Reels)—December 11.—Don Jose Hermanos' choice for his daughter's hand is Pedro Cerveroz, but Pepita favors Carlos Romez. When the Mexican war breaks out Pedro enlists in Hermanos' regiment with the federals, and Carlos joins the rebels. While Carlos is on his way to Villa's camp with important dispatches he is pursued by the federals and takes refuge in Pepita's house. The soldiers fail to find him, but Pedro suspects a trick of some kind, disguises one of his men as a rebel, and sends him to the house. He is taken in by Pepita and Carlos. Stepping to the window, while their backs are turned, he signals the hiding federals. Carlos hears them coming and escapes, leaving his dispatches with the girl. Her sense of duty to her father compels her to warn him of their contents. Later Carlos returns and escorts her to safety over the boundary.

In Wildman's Land—Majestic—December 11.—While visiting in a mountainous country about which are told many strange stories of its once being populated with wild men Mrs. Baldwin falls asleep, and dreams that her little boy, Harry, is kidnaped by one of the creatures. In attempting to rescue him Mr. Baldwin is killed after slaying three of the savages. His wife manages to draw Harry's captor's attention away from him by throwing her a large doll. Mrs. Baldwin picks the boy up in her arms, and flees. She is almost out of the savages' sight when a giant wildman overtakes her. The teror-stricken mother awakes to find Harry pounding her on her head in an effort to arouse her from her slumber.

On the Ledge — Reliance — (Two Reels)—December 12.—Bob and Mabel are placed in an orphan asylum, and later, when grown up, become separated. Bob, now a broker, has detective agencies search for his sister, but in vain. In the meantime Mabel has run away from the asylum, been brought up by a poor family, and is now employed as a servant a short distance from where Bob's office is located. One day the janitor accidentally locks him out on the ledge or balcony, and Mabel is instrumental in freeing him from his precarious position. Recognition is mutual, and the sister and brother embrace.

The Housebreakers—Komic—December 13.— Bunko Bill obtains a position as gardener at the home of the commisisoner of police, for the purpose of robbing the house. The commissioner's niece tells her lover Harris that she will not marry him unless he performs some gallant deed. He, therefore, arranges with Bill to rob the house, and allow himself to be caught, putting Harris in the light of a hero. Everything works fine until the commissioner's wife appears on the scene. Her pride in her own judgment, however, overcomes her scruples, and she keeps her discovery a secret so that her husband will not know how badly she was fooled in hiring Bill. Harris' halo remains safe, and he wins the niece.

Delphine is so overjoyed at having her baby restored to her that she attempts to embrace him. Forgetting himself for a moment O'Rourke takes the woman in his arms, but releases her in an instant as the vision of the Princess de Grandlieu appears to him. He continues on his way bent on securing a fortune, and making himself worthy of the woman of his heart.

Vivian's Cookies—CRYSTAL—DECEMBER 8.—Piffle's chances for being nominated for alderman look pretty good, and he invites a party of Bull Moosers to his home. His wife prepares a treat for them in the form of some agonizing cookies, and is later summoned to court for her crime. Piffle pays the fine and later receives a letter stating that his name has been taken off of the Bull Moose list.

Whose Baby—CRYSTAL—DECEMBER 8.—Mrs. Skinney is very much alarmed at the kidnaping reports that she hears and reads of, and cautions her maid to be careful with the baby. When she discovers the girl reading in the park with no thought of what the child is doing she determines to give her a scare, and covers over the baby. The maid saunters away with a friend, and a short time later scampers back post haste to see where the baby is. The mother, arriving at the same time, is horrified at finding it gone. After a great deal of excitement it is found that the baby was carried home by a little boy, and they lose no time in recovering it. Mrs. Skinney's anger fades away on once more having her baby, and she forgives the maid for her carelessness.

The District Attorney's Brother—GOLD SEAL—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 8.—Frank and Jack, twin brothers, are exactly the opposites in disposition and diligence. Lazy Jack steals his brother's examination papers in college, and passes on them while his brother is a miserable failure. Jack succeeds in winning Frank's girl from him, and later, through his brother's efforts, is elected district attorney. Frank goes down hill steadily, and is later prosecuted by Jack for robbery. He is released from prison just at the time that Jack is working on the biggest case of his career. Again he appeals to his wronged brother for help, and Frank prepares the case for him, and himself takes it into court after finding his brother in a drunken stupor. Frank's victory is followed by the news of Jack's being killed in a saloon brawl. The widow then realizes that Frank, and not Jack, was really the one she loved.

The Widow's Last—NESTOR—DECEMBER 8.—The crusty, crabbed shoemaker is teased by all the children of the neighborhood. One day his window is smashed, and the guilty ones escape. The old man catches one boy who was not implicated in the mischief, and whips him soundly. The angry mother finds the old fellow ill when she visits with the intention of scolding him, and her sympathy is aroused. When the shoemaker learns that she is a widow he proposes, and his nurse becomes his wife.

Dane Elwin, a wealthy clubman, takes a liking to the demure little woman, and several times escorts her home. Madame Devere infatuates David so that he forgets all about his wife. Impressed by Anne's goodness Dane determines to save David from the siren and literally throws himself in her arms. Her reception of him awakens David to a realization of the kind of a woman who has entranced him, and he returns to his little gray home in the country where he finds Anne waiting for him.

The Trail-Breakers—101 BISON—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 12.—Clifford is in love with Marie Roselli, the daughter of his employer, the president of the D. & H. railroad. Roselli's choice for his daughter is Bainbridge, a director and stockholder in the D. & H. road. When he discovers the love affair between Marie and his secretary he discharges Clifford at once. The young fellow goes West and secures employment with the C. & D. road, the D. & H.'s rival. Later Roselli, his daughter, and Bainbridge leave for the West in the president's private car, their intention being to buy over the C. & D. When they fail in this they supply liquor to the Indians in the construction gang, hoping to tie up their work. The drink-crazed Indians start for the private car intending to kill its occupants. Clifford is notified, and goes to their rescue. As a reward Roselli consents to his marriage to Marie.

Love Disguised—JOKER—DECEMBER 12.—Harry is forbidden to woo Mandy because her mother wishes her to marry a member of the nobility. Business at the Go-Broke hotel slumps considerably, and the manager hits upon a tonic. He advertises the arrival of the marriagable Count de Monnie Roll, and the women for miles around flock to the hotel. Among them are Mandy and her mother. Mother insists that the girl marry the count, and the girl consents, much against her will. When the count turns out to be Harry in disguise mother can say nothing for she insisted upon the marriage.

The Mountain Traitor—ECLAIR—DECEMBER 13.—Sid, the nephew of Dan Clayton, the leader of a band of moonshiners, is released from prison, and drifts back into his old ways. He is attracted by Ruth Mason's beauty, and wants to marry her, but her father will not permit it. Ruth is in love with Joe Selby, the clerk of the village store. Sid decides to get even with Mason by giving away the location of his still. Joe attempts to warn the moonshiner, but is captured by the revenue officers. Sid attends the trial and brags about his achievements. Ruth hears him, and causes his arrest. Joe is freed, and the final scene shows him and Ruth crossing the mountains to a new home, accompanied by Rad Mason who has given up moonshining to live with his daughter and her husband.

A Night of Thrills—Rex — (Two Reels)—December 13.—On the wedding day of Hazel and Jack, the girl hears a scandalous story about her fiance, and quarrels with him. Before his death Hazel's uncle has left the pair the Wild estate, giving each a key to the mansion. To avoid questions Hazel secludes herself in the big house until the scandal of her breaking with Jack has quieted. She is startled at hearing burglars in the house, and dashes to the front door, running plump into Jack's arms. Thinking him another burglar she screams, frightening the thieves who think the deserted house haunted. Jack revives Hazel, and is told that he will not be forgiven unless he humbles himself before her. This, of course, he refuses to do, being innocent. Uncle Howard's spirit intervenes and settles the quarrel, and the couple agree to be married on the morrow.

Alliance

Hearts and Flowers — Cosmos—(Five Reels)—November 30.—Tom Landers and Walter Terry are in love with a country girl. A fight takes place between them in which Tom is thrown over a cliff. Tom fears he has killed him and flees to the city. After many hardships he secures a position with some stock brokers and this leads to his becoming a broker and a gambler. He borrows one thousand dollars from his mother, which is money the parents had intended to use to pay the mortgage on the farm. This he also loses and is ashamed to reply to his mother's letter asking for the payment of the loan. His father dies after an accident and, because she is unable to pay the mortgage, his mother is turned out of her home. Tom rescues Elsa Norman, a society belle, from a footpad and they fall in love. Tom's mother arrives in the city and goes to his offices. He is ashamed of her and after placing her in a poor boarding house asks her not to call on him again. Elsa meets his mother and takes her to the boarding house when she becomes weak from hunger on the street. She is told of the state of affairs and is shocked by Tom's rudeness. She breaks their engagement and then, out of pity, purchases the farm and presents it to the old lady. Tom returns to the farm with his mother, heartbroken at losing Elsa. The old lady later pleads with the girl to forgive him and all ends happily.

Box Office

The Judge's Wife—White Star—(Three Reels)—Judge Livingston, his second wife and his daughter, Elenor, are living happily together. Dick Winthrop, the judge's secretary, is in love with Elenor. All goes well until Mrs. Livingston overdraws her bank account. The matter is referred to Dick by the bank officials and he endeavors to settle it without letting the judge know, but Mrs. Livingston is indignant and in revenge separates Elenor and him. The daughter has been working in the slums and falls into the hands of white slavers. Dick rescues her after a terrific fight and takes her home. Mrs. Livingston tries to steal enough money from her husband's safe to pay the deficit in her account, but Dick catches her in the act. She accuses him of the theft and he accepts the blame to shield her. When she sees him being discharged she relents and confesses all to her husband. He forgives her and all obstacles are removed from the path of the lovers.

The Test of Manhood—(Three Reels)—Harry Wentworth is discharged from the position of foreman of his father's ranch, because he is addicted to gambling and drink. The old man employs a Mexican to succeed his son, not knowing that he is planning with a loan shark to ruin him. Crandall, a gambler, brings his sister from the East and requests the men to keep his life a secret from her. Martin becomes infatuated with her and threatens to expose Ralph unless he approves of his suit for her hand. Harry ships on a coast-wise vessel and he and two pals, whom he has met, have a fight with the crew. After a hard tussle they manage to escape by diving overboard and swimming to shore. He takes his two pals with him and returns home, where he learns that his father is being swindled by the loan shark. He also meets Crandall's sister and falls in love with her. Martin sees this and determines to have the girl abducted. Harry and Ralph manage to get the ranch mortgage back, through a card game, and Harry's pals and himself spoil the plan to abduct the girl. Harry and Crandall's sister then find happiness in each other's love.

The Wall's of Jericho—Box Office—(Five Reels)—Jack Frosbisher returns to England a millionaire and enters the elite social set, through marriage with a woman of position. He sees their worthless life and becomes disgusted with it. Hanky Bannister, one of his Australian pals and a millionaire like himself, visits him and Frobisher's sister-in-law plans to "catch" him. Frobisher is unable to interest his wife or her relations in the work of building sanitary houses for the poor. A sympathetic friend, Lady Westerby, tells him that he is too tame and all he has to do is to shout and the walls of Jericho will fall flat. He discovers that his wife and the society favorite, Harry Dallas, are in love and views this with contempt. The trumpets of ram's horns are blown and the Australian shouts before the Jericho of smartness when he forces his titled brother-in-law to marry a girl whose honor has been compromised. Again the trumpets are blown when he attempts to prevent the marriage of his sister-in-law to the infatuated Bannister and there is another blast when Dallas is made read a love letter written to his wife. The Walls of Jericho are rent asunder when he announces that he is going to sell his property in England and return to Queensland with his wife and children. His wife stubbornly protests and he denounces the life in which she has been raised and tells her that she is going with him despite herself. On thinking the matter over she decides she cares more for him than for her society friends. Thus the Walls of Jericho fall flat.

Eclectic

The Stolen Birthright—Wharton—(Three Reels).—A man, whose own child has died, steals one of the twin babies of another and raises her as his own. Years later the lover of the stolen girl mistakes her sister for her and the husband of the second girl believes his wife faithless. The setting is laid in the East and West and, after many complications, because of the distance which separates the twins, all is straightened out. A complete review will be found on page 805 of this issue.

Thirty Years of a Gambler's Life—Pathe—(Three Parts).—This is a powerful story of a man whose weakness for gambling deprives him and his wife of all the pleasures and comforts of life, and only loosens its grip upon him when he meets, amid his poverty-stricken surroundings, his son, a clean-cut, sensible young fellow who was raised under a relative's care. While engaged to Marjorie Vincent, George Notman catches the gambling fever from his "friend" Warner, and within a comparatively short time is reduced to poverty, dragging the girl, who is now his wife, down with him. One night he joins Warner in a plot to kill and rob a well-dressed young fellow who is putting up for the night at his cottage. At the last minute Notman learns that the boy is his own son, who was adopted by a relative some years before. A happy reunion and good resolutions for the future follow. C.R.C.

General Special

The Locked Door—Broadway Star—(Three Reels) — Harold Forsythe's father owns the Century Suit Company, who have all the modern fire prevention devices obtainable. On the floor below them Mabel Emanuel's father conducts the Atlas Waist Syndicate's Shop and has absolutely no protection against fire. Harold and his father attempt to persuade Emanuel to put in fire prevention devices, but he tells them to mind their own business. The fire inspector also warns him and in revenge he sets fire to the Century plant. This is extinguished easily by the modern fire devices, but Mabel is accused of arson, because she is found on the premises. She is released on bail and a few days later a fire breaks out in the Atlas plant and there is no way to fight the flames. They quickly consume everything within their range and Mabel and her father are trapped on the fire escape. Both are rescued by Harold and the firemen and Emanuel confesses his folly and clears Mabel of the crime she was accused of. Harold and Mabel then discover that they are in love.

The School For Scandal—KALEM—(FOUR REELS)—Sir Peter Teazle raises the two nephews, Charles and Joseph, of Sir Oliver. The former is wild but upright, while the latter is a hypocrite. Teazle marries a girl younger than himself and Joseph falls in love with her. Charles loves Maria but Teazle refuses to sanction the match. The gossiping villagers meet daily and pick their friends to pieces, this being known as the school for scandal. Sir Oliver returns and discovers the true character of his nephews. Sir Teazle discovers his wife in Joseph's rooms, after he has been led to believe by the scandal school that Charles is the one who loves her. Lady Teazle confesses her part of the flirtation and begs her husband's forgiveness but the gossippers stretch the incident until they have all the principals dead or wounded. To their surprise they find them all alive and well. Sir Oliver disinherits Joseph, making Charles his heir. He also consents to the marriage of Charles and Maria.

The Tangle—BROADWAY STAR—(FOUR REELS)—Lieutenant Bradley becomes engaged to Margaret Lane, a society girl, and they are happy until she sees a picture of another woman in his possession. Then she breaks their engagement and marries Colonel Everett, though she tells him she does not love him. Two years later Bradley is in Texas under the command of Everett and Margaret discovers that the other woman was the lieutenant's sister. She longs for him again but both are too honorable to trust themselves to meet again. One day, however, she sends for him and the Colonel learns of it. He hides near their meeting place, ready to kill Bradley if he oversteps the bounds of honor. The lieutenant controls himself, as he did before and Everett admires him as a man of great worth. A short time later the troops are called to the front and, in a terriffic battle, Everett is wounded. His dying request is that Bradley marry Margaret.

The Dancer and the King—BLANEY—FIVE REELS)—NOVEMBER 30.—The secretary of the young king of Bavarre sees and is impressed with a little girl who dances in the street. When her father dies, the secretary takes the little dancer under his care and in time she becomes the premiere danseuse of the capital. The young king sees her and becomes infatuated. To win her, he showers attention and riches and in turn she pleads for the poor of the nation. The king grants her request, thereby incurring the enmity of the nobility, who lay all the blame for his acts at the little dancer's door. A plot is discovered, which will mean the death of the king, if it is carried out, but the dancer risks her life to warn him. The few that are loyal to him are able to incite the people to battle against the revolutionary army. Enraged at the failure of his plotting, the prime minister, who has sought to supplant the king, realizes that the dancer is responsible for his downfall and in the duel between the dancer and the minister, the minister is killed. Leaderless the revolutionists are overcome, and the king weds the dancer, with general rejoicing on the part of the populace.

Miscellaneous

Called Back—Cosmofotofilm—(Four Reels)—An adaptation of Hugh Conway's novel. Dr. Ceneri spends the fortunes of his nephew and niece Anthony and Pauline. This leads to a quarrel between Ceneri and Anthony, in which the latter is stabbed to death. Pauline is singing in the next room when the murder is committed and her mind is made blank by it. At the same moment Gilbert Vaughan, a blind young man, enters the house by mistake and hears the struggle. Ceneri rushes him away, however, and when he returns home none of his friends will believe his story. Two years pass and find Vaughan's sight restored by a successful operation. He meets Pauline and through Ceneri's influence quickly marries her. After the ceremony he discovers that her mind is affected. One day, while passing the house in which the murder was committed, Pauline states her intention of going in and to humor her Vaughan follows. She sings the same song she sang on the fatal night and at the point where the murder occurred she faints. Suddenly the scene re-occurs to Vaughan and he knows that this is the house into which he strayed. He takes Pauline home and finds that her mind has been restored by the shock. Vaughan accuses Macari, one of Ceneri's conspirators who wished to marry Pauline, of the murder but he puts him off with a smooth story. Determined to learn the truth, Vaughan follows Ceneri to Siberia, where he has been sent through Macari's influence. On his death-bed, Ceneri confesses the crime and begs Vaughan to tell his faithful friend Petroff that the other man betrayed him. Vaughan does this and the incidents which follow lead to Petroff's killing Macari and the happy uniting of Pauline and Vaughan.

The Devil's Fiddler—Apex—(Three Reels).—Juana, a dancing girl, becomes the model of Anatol, an artist, and they are very happy together. One day a deformed fiddler named Scaramourse comes to the studio and his playing casts a spell over Juana. The artist has them pose together and does not notice the influence the fiddler has over the girl until one day she leaves him and goes with Scaramourse. Six months later Anatol visits a gambling club in Paris and sees the fiddler playing at the tables, the stakes being Juana. Anatol tries to persuade the girl, who is dancing at the club, to return to him but she refuses. He then takes her bodily, knocking the fiddler down when he tries to interfere. When they are in the studio again Juana is happy, but Scaramourse follows. He again plays his mad music to her and the girl dances until she falls to the floor dead. His vengeance complete, the deformed fiddler steals away.

The Loss of the Birkhead—Apex—(Three Reels)—Roger, the son of the village squire, loves Deborah but has Seth, another village youth, as a rival. When Roger proves the stronger of the two, the girl accepts him and despite his father's objections Roger marries her. He takes her to London, where she lives with him amid a life of dissipation. The death of Roger's father calls them gack to the village and Deborah realizes how disgusting her husband's life has been. Roger is cut off without a penny and determines to disgrace his family. He enlists as a private in a recruiting company which passes through the village and takes Deborah with him. Seth, fearing the hardships she will suffer, also enlists as a private in order to make her life easier. The company embarks on the troopship "Birkhead," bound for India. The vessel is wrecked and, as the women are placed in the life boats, Roger realizes that Deborah loves Seth instead of him. The boat goes down and Roger clings to a piece of wreckage. He finds Seth struggling in the water and gives up his life that his rival may cling to the wreckage. Morning finds Seth and Deborah united on the shore.

Polidor the Sleep-Walker—Picture Playhouse—Polidor's wife is jealous of him and will not allow him to join any late parties at cafes. His friends suggest to him as a means of getting out of the house, he adopt the tactics of a sleep-walker. He arises in the middle of the night and is just leaving the house when he is discovered by his wife. When she sees that he is walking in his sleep she rushes out in the street and calls the police. They start a hunt for Polidor but he is enjoying an entertainment with his friends. She breaks in in the midst of the wine supper and Polidor instantly freezes into his somnambulistic attitude. He starts off with the prettiest girl in the room followed closely by the police and his wife and drops the letter on the street. When his wife reads this the police come up and arrest poor Polidor.

Polidor the Hunchback—Picture Playhouse.—A poor hunchback is in love with a beautiful girl but is thrown over by her because of his deformity. He tries in every possible ridiculous way to rid himself of this disfigurement and finally goes to a witch, purchasing from her with an immense fortune, the secret of taking away his own hump and giving a hump to others. Hastening to the home of his bride-to-be he finds her in the midst of the wedding ceremony to another man, and just in time puts a hump on her and all the assembled guests. They plead with him to rid them of this sudden visitation, and he does so, after obtaining the bride.

The Adventures of Gar El Hama—Great Northern—(Four Reels)—After months of toil Gar El Hama escapes from prison by tunneling through his cell to the engine room, overpowering the engineer and leaving the prison dressed in the latter's clothes. He then attends a reception given by Counsel Johanna and after it kidnaps Katherine the counsel's daughter. He then sends a message stating that she is held for a ransom of twenty-five thousand dollars. Lieutenant Erskin, her sweetheart, sets out to find her and is told that the girl was taken aboard a mysterious schooner by a band of pirates, so he charters a tug and starts out in pursuit. Gar El Hama and his gang arrive at Snake Island and make Katherine a prisoner in their headquarters. She escapes, but is re-captured and taken aboard the leader's yacht. Erskin and his friends arrive at the island and a battle betwen them and the pirates follow. Gar El Hama escapes through a secret tunnel and the lieutenant pursues him only to be taken captive and also imprisoned on the yacht. His friends take up the pursuit of the yacht as it steams away and Erskin manages to disable the engine. He then hurries to Katherine and defends her from the pirates until his friends arrive and capture the yacht. Katherine is restored to her home and Gar El Hama is again thrown into prison.

Press Agent Says

That a woman visited one of the motion picture theaters in Chicago recently and saw Francis X. Bushman on the screen. She was overcome with emotion and left the theater. The next morning she called at the Essanay studio to see the star. He was out at the time, but the woman declared he was her son, who had run away from home in childhood. When assured that Bushman is a Virginian and not a native of Chicago, she refused to believe it. She declared she could not be mistaken in her own son and vowed she would return later to claim him.

Pathe's "The Silent Accuser"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

IN order to hold a spectator's attention it is not absolutely necessary that a photoplay be based on something that has happened or actually been accomplished in the past. One is willing to accept the author's hypothesis, especially one dealing with science, if the story he builds upon it be a diversion from the average hackneyed plot. In "The Silent Accuser," a four-part Pathe production, the hub upon which the entire action revolves is a scientific problem which inventors have been working upon and endeavoring to perfect for years, a telephone which enables the speaker to be seen as well as heard.

The smooth unraveling of the story makes it easily understood, and enables the cast to be interpreters as well as impersonators of the various roles. The play is well staged in both a dramatic and artistic sense, and the photography is unsurpassable. The effect of transmitting by wire a photograph of the person calling on the telephone is most realistic. Criticism might be made of the scene in which the boy jumps out of his hiding place on the top of the automobile, climbs down, and stops the runaway machine. This development in the story is a little bit too startling and melodramatic to be in keeping with the rest of the picture. It may be the professionally heroic manner in which he makes his appearance that gives it this effect, but it is so sudden and wholly unexpected that one is more inclined to laugh than to consider his act seriously.

Mr. Durling receives a call from a young inventor, Robert Macey, who has just perfected a wonderful telephone that enables the speaker to be seen as well as heard. He becomes interested in the affair, and consents to finance it. His daughter's interest, however, is in Macey, himself, whose every glance and word betray his love and admiration for her. Durling looks upon the match favorably until his mind is poisoned against Macey by Julian Delatour, his nephew, who wishes to marry Vera in order to secure her father's fortune. Angered by the capitalist's accusation the young inventor severs their business relations.

Some time later Durling succumbs to an attack of the heart, and the plant in which Macey's telephones are being manufactured falls into Delatour's hands. Macey's younger brother, Jean, is one of the factory employes, and keeps the inventor posted on the company's plans and progress. Delatour holds a demonstration for Miss Durling's benefit, but Macey, disguised, manages to be present, and the result of the trial is a mysterious failure.

Fearing to lose the rights on his invention Macey bequeaths it to Vera in a will, wishing to give her the impression that he has died. A fictitious note informs her that she will be called on the new telephone at nine o'clock that evening. Just before the appointed time Delatour and his partner call upon Vera, and try to induce her to invest heavily in a new company they are forming, but she refuses. As Macey picks up his receiver at nine o'clock he is startled to see on the screen attachment Vera being gagged and carried off by the two men.

Jean has taken up the pursuit of the kidnapers, and notes dropped by him inform Macey of the direction taken by the trio. He overtakes them in an automobile, but, just when they seem in his power, the tables are turned on Macey, and he and Vera are sent racing down a steep incline in a driverless machine. Jean does the heroic thing at just the right moment, and the couple are spared. They enlist the aid of the police, and go to the factory prepared to arrest Delatour and his partner, but Fate outwits them. While endeavoring to demonstrate Macey's invention to a body of capitalists Delatour comes in contact with a high power electric current and meets instant death It is not difficult to guess from the final scene that Vera will soon be Mrs. Robert Macey.

Realistic Wedding

What is claimed to be the most elaborate and wonderful wedding ever staged, has just been completed in the new serial "Runaway June," which is now being made by the Reliance Motion Picture Company. Contrary to the usual method of conducting these affairs, the bridesmaids and guests in this particular wedding were not taken from the moving-picture field, but were selected from the most beautiful models in New York today. The gowns in particular were of special design by Miss Norma Phillips, who plays the bride in "Runaway June," and were made by Madame Jeanete, the Fifth avenue modiste. The bridal gown which Miss Phillips wears is in original and unique design, and is said to have cost a fortune, and the six bridesmaids' costumes are particularly unique, inasmuch as they represent the American ideas rather than the Parisian in this respect.

"Damon and Pythias" at Fine Arts

Beginning Monday, December 7, at the Fine Arts Theater, Chicago, the Universal's spectacular photoplay, "Damon and Pythias," has been doing big business. During the engagement performances will be given each evening and there will be daily matinees, Sundays included. Every resource of its vast equipment and art direction with a lavish expenditure of money have made this the most notable film from the Universal studios. Months of study and research were put in by the directors to make every detail accurate and picture perfectly the various scenes in Greece, at the time of its power and pomp, four hundred years before the Christian era. The presentation will be made most elaborately and with orchestral rendition of especially selected and set music. Telling the story of the greatest friendship that has ever existed among men, its varying scenes in the period of Grecian glory it is filled with superb and massive pictures full of action and with episodes bristling with real dramatic fire. The spectacle has been most enthusiastically endorsed by the Knights of Pythias, while all who have in their hearts a kindred feeling for their fellows will find in its presentation a wonderful emulation of brotherly love.

"Edison Night" Big Attraction

"Edison Night" at the Regent Theater, One Hundred and Sixteenth street and Seventh avenue, New York, held on November 27, proved a night edifying to both Manager George Baldson and the Edison stars, whose presence packed the 2,000-capacity theater with that number—and more—of enthusiastic "fans" come to see that their favorite received his or her due share of the cheering. Attention was divided between the screen and the box nearby where sat the following Edison stars: Miss Miriam Nesbitt, Miss Mabel Trunnelle, Miss Gladys Hulette, Marc MacDermott, Augustus Phillips, Andy Clark, and Herbert Prior. Manager Horace G. Plimpton and Frank Bannon, from the Edison studio, also occupied the box. After the festivities Manager Baldson showed his appreciation by wining and dining the Edison contingent at the Hotel Cecil. Manager Balsdon is so convinced of the drawing power of his idea that he plans to have another group of Edison players and another Edison night.

Pittsburgh Has Sunday Film Show

It's unlawful to show films in Pittsburgh on Sunday. Despite the law, socialists and film folk arranged to show the great labor drama "Lost Paradise," the five reel Famous Players feature, at the Lyceum theater on Sunday, November 22. Safety Director Charles S. Hubbard had announced that if an attempt were made to show motion pictures, as announced by the Pittsburgh Socialist Educational League, the leaders of the affair would be arrested. The Socialists had announced that if there was any interference by the police the case would go to the highest courts, as the pictures to be shown were educational in their nature and not for profit. The films were screened without interference and Sunday night Director Hubbard said he intended to "Let the Socialists go ahead and tire themselves out. Personally I believe it is better to let the workingmen have picture shows of this sort than to seek recreation elsewhere."

"In Tune" an Interesting Subject

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

"IN TUNE," the two-reel drama to be released by the American Film Manufacturing Company on Monday, December 14, is built upon a strong theme, developed by highly dramatic action and convincingly "put over" by the splendid quartet of "Flying A" players, Ed Coxen, Winnifred Greenwood, Charlotte Burton and George Field.

As in all the productions of this company the photography is one of its chief assets and a number of scenes taken in a business office in Santa Barbara, Cal., are remarkably clear. By using a real office the director created an atmosphere of realism which could not have been obtained with a studio set, no matter how elaborate it might be.

The plot starts where it should start and slowly advances toward the climax, through a series of dramatic episodes. The characters are carefully drawn and all their acts are logical. Because of this treatment a great deal of interest is aroused in their struggles and is kept keyed up to a high pitch in practically every scene. Considered as a whole, "In Tune" is one of the most interesting two-reel dramas to come from the American studio for some time, which is no mean tribute.

The opening scenes disclose the discord of Tom Stanley's home life. For years he struggled for recognition as an author and, when fame finally descended upon him, he became the "catch" of the season and was "landed" by a thoughtless society belle. From the moment of their marriage she had interfered with his work and now, after two years of married life, we find him but a mere shadow of the genius he formerly was.

Tom learns that the bonds have been taken.

The death of his father causes the old man's business, together with his feeble partner, to revert to Tom. As he cares nothing for office duties and as his partner is unable to actively engage in the work, the entire responsibility of handling the loans for the firm falls upon the shoulders of Ida Drew, Tom's secretary and a thoughtful business woman.

After considering the matter for a long time Tom decides that the only way to bring happiness to his home is by becoming the father of children, upon whom he may lavish his love. When he proposes the matter to his wife she indignantly leaves the room. As he can find no comfort at home he spends most of his time at the office, for in Ida he has found a companion who understands things as he does and with whom he can intelligently converse.

One day his bookkeeper is in urgent need of a sum of money. As he has noticed Tom's careless manner of signing all his mail without looking it over he slips a blank sheet among the letters and after he has secured Stanley's signature he writes a note on Ida's typewriter requesting that some bonds be delivered to a certain person at once. He sends a boy for the bonds and receives them himself.

When the loss is discovered Tom agrees to sign over his home to the owners of the bonds to make up for the loss. When his wife learns of this she leaves him, for she realizes that he can no longer furnish her with the luxuries for which she craves. Ida secures the paper on which the order was written and notices that the imprint of the keys on the paper is very heavy. When she discovers the bookkeeper writing on her machine and notices that the work he turns out corresponds to the message which caused Tom's loss she believes she has a clue to the perpetrator of the piece of rascality.

Tom's wife is killed in a hotel fire and, on the day he receives the message, Ida finds the boy who delivered the bonds to the bookkeeper and completes her chain of evidence. She tells Tom of her accomplishment and he is about to prosecute the thief when the latter agrees to return the bonds. Stanley's home is restored to him and in time he repays Ida for her loyalty by making her his wife. Again he takes up writing and this time he finds that all the cleverness which made him famous has returned. He searches for the reason and discovers it when he realizes that Ida's presence has made his home life "in tune" with his mode of living.

"The Ghost Breaker" Pleases

After being starred successfully in a number of other plays, H. B. Warner returns to his original role in "The Ghost Breaker," but this time he impersonates the adventurous southerner, Warren Jarvis, on the screen, instead of behind the footlights. At the Strand theater on December 7, the day of its release, this new Jesse L. Lasky five-part feature was received with laughs, gasps and intense silence according to the emotions aroused by its various situations, and was followed by a burst of applause that indicated plainly that H. B. Warner, Rita Stanwood (Princess Maria Theresa), and Horace B. Carpenter (Carlos, Duke d'Alva) are people well worth grouping in a photoplay.

The balance of the cast is also entitled to no little commendation. Betty Johnson as Carmen, Theodore Roberts as the Prince of Aragon, and J. W. Johnson as Markham, have good parts and make them better, but are relegated to the hereafter in the first reel of their appearance. Jode Mullally's long imprisonment in the haunted castle prevents his being present for any great while in the role of the princess' brother, Don Luis. The remaining characters are Spanish servants, maids, dark-skinned youths, and the "ghosts" of the old castle.

There are one or two places where the action is a little hard to follow, possibly because the censorship board has seen fit to eliminate the key to the situation, but it does not interfere with the general trend of the story, as the question is not about what was done, but how it was done. Smooth, sepia-tinted photography does full justice to the American and Spanish settings and locations, which are not only distinctive, but help considerably to keep one in the spirit of the play.

Briefly, the story is of a treasure quest. One of Princess Marie Theresa's ancestors has secreted a fortune in an old haunted castle, and she enlists the services of Warren Jarvis, a dauntless American, to help her recover it. He consents to be a "ghost breaker," enters the castle, and captures the master ghost, who turns out to be the much respected Duke d'Alva, who has played upon the people's superstitions with weird sounds and the rattling of chains while trying to find the treasure himself. The task of curing the old castle of ghosts accomplished, Jarvis turns his attention to a weightier matter; but everything is in his favor, and he finds that winning the princess' heart is a much easier and more pleasant occupation than "ghost breaking." "Mystery" Stars Again Appear "Million Dollar Mystery" fans will have an opportunity to see their favorites in "Craft Versus Love" a forthcoming two-reel feature release by Thanhouser. Florence La Badie, the heroine of the famous serial, in the lead has an unusual chance to display her great histrionic ability, so wondrously set off by her exceptional girlish charm. Supporting Miss La Badie is Sidney Bracy, known the country over as "Jones, the butler." Mr. Bracy offers a remarkable contribution to the silent drama in "Craft Versus Love." The combination of Miss La Badie and Mr. Bracy has brought scores of telegrams of congratulations to the Thanhouser management, showing concretely the high place these two stars hold in the hearts of the country's motion picture fans.

Yale-Harvard Film Going Big

The athletic picture, the Yale-Harvard Game, which was filmed by the Colonial Motion Picture Corporation, is meeting with unprecedented success as a topical feature. Aside from the better motion picture theaters throughout the east and middle west, B. F. Keith has booked this as a special production on his regular vaudeville program in all of the eastern cities. One print has been booked solid for thirty days to the Central Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, which will show it in its associations and various branches throughout the east. Another new channel open to the picture is the Yale and Harvard Clubs, which are buying copies outright, to be shown at the various banquets and gatherings of the respective clubs.

Centaur Studio for Rent

Owing to the fact that David Horsley has sent all of his producing forces to Los Angeles for the winter, the Centaur studio at Bayonne, N. J., has been offered for rent. The Centaur studio has just been equipped with Cooper-Hewitt and Kleigel lights, is glass topped and, in point of equipment and arrangement is second to none in America.

The reorganized "Beauty" company has begun work under the direction of Frank Cooley, with Perry Banks as assistant director. Joseph Harris will play leads, opposite Miss Virginia Kirtley, Webster Campbell juvenile leads, and Fred Gamble and Gladys Kingsbury character.

Leprosy the Theme of This Film

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

A POWERFUL dramatic story with leprosy as its theme is "Till Death Us Do Part," a two-reel Selig feature, scheduled for release on Monday December 21.

The picture depends for its climax on the valor of weakness, on the revelation that a studious, well bred, cultured, but rather physically weak physician, who has time and again been shown to disadvantage in comparison with another character of athletic build and powerful physique, would sacrifice all his hopes and ambitions in life for the sake of a girl attacked by leprosy.

Dr. Leigh cares for Random after he has wounded him.

Kathlyn Williams, the famous Selig lead, appears in the role of Anne Brewster, who is shipwrecked with Doctor Albert Leigh and Roderick Random, an athlete of note, and by some freak of fortune thrown on a desert island.

While Anne, with her soft white hands, is proven utterly helpless for the task of ministering to her own necessities, and Dr. Leigh, the physician, though possessing the highest type of mental development is shown totally unfit to protect himself and his companions from the elements, Roderick Random is able to discover cooking utensils, to capture fish and game, to erect a shelter for the girl, and to make life generally possible on their island refuge, while they are waiting for help to arrive.

Random works heroically to make Anne comfortable, though Dr. Leigh does whatever his physical strength will permit. He realizes that he is powerless to sustain his own life and that of the girl, without the practical help of Random. As the weeks lengthen into months, the veneer of refinement wears off, and Random finally descends from a courteous, considerate gentleman, to a mere animal, with primitive instincts and passions.

When one night he forgets all that is manly within him, and visits the cave in which Anne is peacefully asleep, Dr. Leigh follows and attacks him with a knife which he has found.

Anne is awakened by the struggle and for the first time realizes the power of the physician, whom before she had considered a weakling. To quiet her alarm Leigh insists that Random take his belongings to the other side of the island, and a few days later is almost tempted to do so himself, when he discovers that Anne is affected with leprosy, which she has contracted from a blanket left on the island by some other refugee, years before, who has suffered from the awful disease.

Weeks later when a ship is sighted and boats put out for the shore, Random rushes to the sailors and begs to be taken off the island. Dr. Leigh, however, sends for the captain to come ashore and unite Anne and himself in wedlock, as he realizes that he must remain on the island since he himself is doubtless affected by the disease, and he owes it to Anne to make the remainder of her life happy. As the picture closes, Random is sailing away to safety and Dr. Leigh and Anne are silhoutted against the sinking sun, gazing out at the vanishing ship.

Carlyle Blackwell says that he is going to make "The Last Chapter," from the story entitled "An Unfinished Story," by Richard Harding Davis, the best that he has ever put out. He is in love with the story as it gives all his players splendid parts.

Another Pathe-Hearst Serial

The combination between the Hearst newspapers and Pathe which made possible "The Perils of Pauline" will be continued in a big new serial to be called "The Exploits of Elaine." Unlike "The Perils of Pauline" this new serial will be released in about fourteen weekly episodes of two reels each. The first installment will probably appear on Monday, December 28. Charles L. Goddard, the well-known playwright who is the author of "Pauline," will write the new serial in collaboration with Arthur R. Reeve. author of the "Craig Kennedy" stories which have been running in the Cosmopolitan magazine for four years. Mr. Reeve is a new comer in the motion picture business and brings to his work a world-wide reputation for remarkable talent in introducing the most modern scientific knowledge and methods into detective stories. A graduate in science of Princeton University he afterwards specialized in criminal law at the New York Law School, thus getting the ground work for the stories which he has since written. His character, "Craig Kennedy" is unique and has made Mr. Reeve famous. Under the name of "The Poisoned Pen," "The Dream Doctor" and "The Silent Bullet," these detective stories have been published yearly in book form. "Craig Kennedy" is practically the only one of the modern fiction detectives who uses real scientific methods to hunt down his criminals.

Arthur R. Reeve.

Charles T. Goddard.

Every new invention which could possibly be used in the detection of guilt in crime is studied by Mr. Reeve. In many instances such instruments have been sent to him by the manufacturers with the request that they be used in his stories, the makers believing that such mention would mean vast and desirable publicity. "Craig Kennedy," Mr. Reeve's famous scientific detective character will appear in "The Exploits of Elaine." The cast will be headed by Miss Pearl White, who has achieved such remarkable popularity in "The Perils of Pauline." The other principals are Arnold Daly, well known on both the stage and screen and Sheldon Lewis, who is at present playing the lead in "Life." Leopold Wharton will be the director. Like "Pauline" the story will be published in the Hearst newspapers all over the country, as the corresponding picture is released. This will mean the same vast and desirable publicity which has attended "Pauline." All the art that long experience, great resources, fine equipment and splendid facilities can give will be put by Pathe into this new production. It seems safe to say that bookings on "The Exploits of Elaine" will furnish exchange men with new records to shoot at for some time to come.

New Universal Projection Room

Just a few weeks more and Chicago exhibitors will be offered an advance showing of Universal firms, weekly, in a real de luxe projection room which is now in process of completion at Suite 303-305 Brady building, 109 North Dearborn street. George Magie of the Universal staff has long had in mind the opening of a private projection room in which Universal patrons, members of the trade press and the Censor Board might view the films amid more pleasant surroundings than the Universal has yet been able to offer its Chicago friends, but his plan only now becomes a reality.

The new projection room is roomy, well ventilated and equipped in most modern style in every respect. The exhibitors will find comfortable chairs awaiting them, instead of the hard theater seats to which they are accustomed in other projection rooms, while the projection booth itself is a veritable palace, equipped with two Power's 6A machines of the latest type, together with all the other paraphernalia which goes to make up the modern projection booth. The equipment and arrangement of the booth, while carried out according to Mr. Magie's suggestions and plans, was installed and supervised by Harry Igle and the popular "Henry," who is known to every exhibitor in the city.

The auditorium portion of the room is to be decorated in a pretty green shade, which will be restful to the eye, and carpets of a similar shade will cover the floor. A screen of adequate size will cover the west wall of the room and every comfort will await those who visit the Universal's new quarters to view pictures. It is understood the room will not be rented out to other concerns desiring to show films, but will be devoted exclusively to the showing of the Universal product. In the near future MOTOGRAPHY hopes to present to its readers a view of the room as it appears when completed.

Equipping Sage Foundation

The Alco Film Corporation has just finished installing in the Sage Foundation building at 130 East Twenty-second street, New York City, a complete projection outfit, including one of its radium gold fibre screens. The screen is so arranged that it can be removed in one minute from one of the lecture rooms to another. After it has been taken from the wall of one room there is no mark left behind to show its former presence there. The projecting machine is arranged on a platform which is movable, so that it can be rolled from one room to another. The screen and the projection outfit are to be used in showing various educational films to social welfare workers on the occasion of welfare gatherings in the rooms of the Sage Foundation.

Louis Kalvin, the Alco electrical engineer who made the installation for Alco, is proud of his work in connection with the screen. He spent considerable time devising a way whereby the projection surface would be set firmly in place, and yet permit of easy and quick removal.

"The Seats of The Mighty"

Reviewed By Charles R. Condon

FOR a vehicle in which to make its debut to the film world the Colonial Motion Picture Corporation chose a colonial subject and if one may judge from "The Seats of the Mighty," pictures of no common merit may be expected hereafter from the Colonial studios. The world Film Corporation is releasing the picture which is a dramatization of Sir Gilbert Parker's book of the same name, nearly seven reels in length.

The story is admirably adapted for screen presentation, being one of the few that can convey their entire sense in pantomine. Sub-titles introduce the characters, and bridge lapses of time between scenes, but do not contribute towards establishing continuity between them. The action and scenes are so arranged that one comprehends thoroughly each new development and thread in the plot.

"The Seats of the Mighty" contains all of the elements necessary for a classic photoplay. Powerfully presented, it offers stirring romance, social tragedy, the mental conflict between individuals and the mighty bodily conflict between the English and French forces on the Plains of Abraham, the capture of historic Quebec by General Wolfe, and a number of small, but vital, scenes convincingly staged. All of these combine to make one big, forcible drama that fairly teems with colonial atmosphere and tense, overpowering situations.

The technique of the interior settings represents the highest in the motion picture art. The rooms of the king's and governor's mansions are exquisitely furnished, and beyond criticism in the completeness of their detail. The country in and about New York did wonderfully well in supplying outdoor locations. Anachronisms have been successfully avoided. The old colonial mansion in the picture would never be taken for anything else, and the scene showing the British troops stealing upon and storming the heights of Quebec imparts all of the excitement and enthusiasm that could well be incited without the accompaniment of the shouts, sounds of firing, and roll of drums that were a part of the original attack.

Much of the credit of the play's success is due to the excellent work of the cast, which is comprised of Lionel Barrymore as Monsieur Doltaire; Glen White as Captain Robert Moray; A. P. Jackson as Monsieur Duvarney; Clinton Preston and Millicent Evans as his son and daughter, Juste and Alixe; and Lois Meredith as Mathilde. In addition to these there are fully a dozen people who take important but small parts, and an unusually large cast of extras. One scene of not more than a few minutes duration contains between four and five hundred people.

The action begins at the Court of King Louis of France, but is soon shifted to the Colony of Virginia in America where lives Captain Robert Moray who is in love with Alixe Duvarney, the daughter of the governor of Canada. Moray is captured by the French, and taken to Canada. Here he falls into the hands of Monsieur Doltaire, Louis' personal representative in America, who wishes to obtain possession of some letters the whereabouts of which Moray knows, but refuses to tell.

Doltaire's hatred for Moray deepens, when he learns of the affection between him and Alixe, whom he also admires. He conspires to place the young captain in the light of a spy, and then compel Alixe to sacrifice her love to save her sweetheart's life. The scheme is successful up to a certain point, but there Alixe defeats it. Moray is tried, and condemned to be shot, but, with Alixe's assistance, manages to escape.

In his flight he discovers a way of scaling the precipitous wall leading to Quebec, and notifies the English. Under the leadership of General Wolfe they storm the heights, and capture the city. Voban, the barber, whose sweetheart Doltaire has betrayed, blows up the governor's mansion, burying Duvarney and Doltaire in its ruins. Moray and Alixe become reunited, and ride away from the scene of turmoil to establish a new home for themselves.

Standard Program Progresses

On January 18, 1915, the Standard Polyscope Corporation will release the first of its subjects through the Standard Program Association. This decision was reached at a meeting of the former corporation last week. Some time ago MOTOGRAPHY carried a story explaining the progress of the Association, but at that time plans for the production of its subjects had not been completed.

Recently the Standard Polyscope Corporation was incorporated under the laws of New York state, with a capital of $1,000,000. William P. Cooper is president and Herbert C. Hoagland general manager. Mr. Hoagland is well known to the film trade through his former connection with the Pathe Company. Another member of the corporation, whose name will be recognized by motion picture people, is Herbert Blache, of the Solax and Blache companies.

"Born Again" Shown

On Friday, December 5, the K. C. Booking Corporation, 512 Mallers Building, Chicago, presented "Born Again," in five reels, at the Fulton exhibition rooms for the trade press and a number of exhibitors. The picture is one made by the Hector Film Corporation and presents Miss Beulah Poynter in the role of Dorothy Gray, heroine of the story. Many of the scenes are splendidly photographed and the backgrounds are of real beauty. The supporting company is adequate, though the player who enacts the role of George Dunbar, Dorothy Gray's first husband, is inclined to rant and gesticulate far too much. Aside from Miss Poynter the player who enacts the part of Dr. Morrow is most worthy of praise.

As the story runs, Dorothy Gray, a stage star, wearied of the attentions of her manager, jumps at the chance to marry George Dunbar, a wealthy man who proposes to her. When her husband becomes intoxicated at a champagne dinner a few days later, Dorothy is so humiliated that she leaves him and wanders aimlessly until sunrise, when she is found by Jeff Marsh and taken into his home.

When she awakens next morning her mind is a total blank as regards the past, and her brain only that of a child of five. Within a year, however, she regains her faculties, though still unable to recall anything that happened previous to her being found by Jeff. With the passage of time Jeff and Dorothy fall in love and are married. A year later the birth of Dorothy's baby restores her memory completely, and she realizes that she had no right to marry Jeff, having never been divorced from Dunbar. Dr. Morrow, who attends her, learns her story and relieves Dorothy of much anxiety by telling her that on the night of her marriage he was called to attend Dunbar, who had been killed by a fall in his auto over a cliff. The vision scenes in which the auto wreck are shown are truly remarkable and add the necessary "punch" to the picture. The doctor's story clears up everything for Dorothy and she and Jeff begin life anew.—N. G. C.

The Screen a Real Detective

Clarence Jay Elmer of the Lubin studios, who plays one of the leading roles in "The Patsy Bolivar" series, Lubin's newest collection of comedies, says the motion picture camera has 'em all beaten when it comes to doing detective work. In one of the series "Patsy" has an adventure with pirates. The pirates obtained for the occasion were a villainous looking lot and during the action of the play they captured Elmer. During the struggle the pirates stood Elmer on his head and everything in his pockets dropped out. When the scene ended Elmer was able to find a few pennies on the ground but nothing else and not one of the pirates knew where the lost articles were. Recently when the reel was shown in the projection room of the big Lubin establishment Elmer discovered what had happened to his lost property. One of the pirates was seen on the film to bend over quickly, pick up the things that had dropped from Elmer's pocket and stuff them into his own pocket. Needless to say with this evidence Elmer had little difficulty in getting his property back again.

Advance Release Date

The Famous Players have decided to change the release date of the spectacular film version of Wilson Barrett's immortal drama, "The Sign of the Cross," originally scheduled for release in February, to December 21. The change was made because of the peculiar appropriateness of the subject as a pre-Chrsitmas release.

Lasky Engages Edith Taliaferro

Samuel Goldfish announces that a contract has been concluded between Jesse L. Lasky as president of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, and Miss Edith Taliaferro, by the terms of which Miss Taliaferro is to be seen in the near future in an elaborate photo-dramatic production.

Miss Taliaferro will be remembered as a leading artist in such widely known Broadway productions as "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and "Young Wisdom." She is the younger sister of Mabel Taliaferro and this will be her first appearance on the screen.

For Miss Taliaferro's photodrama debut Mr. Lasky has selected a play entitled "Young Romance," which is by Wm. C. DeMille. The production will be directed by Cecil B. De Mille, brother of the author. The The story of "Young Romance" concerns the experiences of a young girl clerk in a department store, who, in a fit of June madness, determines to pretend that she is a rich lady of fashion during a brief vacation of one week. In this manner Nellie Nolan transforms herself into Miss Ethel Van Dusen and proceeds to Ocean Beach, Me., there to live a brief life as a society butterfly. One of the young men in the store is seized with substantially the same plan and repairs to the same summer resort. The experience of these two young impostors culminates in their determination to marry.

Keystone Wins

Justice Newberger of the Supreme Court of New York State, on Tuesday denied the application of Marie Dressler for a receiver for the picture "Tillie's Punctured Romance," and an injunction restraining the Keystone Film Company from disposing of the picture to the Alco Film Corporation, her claim being that both parties jointly owned the picture, and that she had not been consulted about the disposition of it.

The defendant, through its attorneys, Messrs. Graham & Stevenson exhibited the contract to the court, which, while giving Marie Dressler a right in the negative, gave the Keystone Film Company the right, so that company claimed, to handle the picture and dispose of it as it thought best. After hearing the evidence Justice Newberger denied the plaintiff's application.

Novelty at Vitagraph Theater

The Vitagraph theater offers its patrons a distinct novelty this week in an original one-act playlet, "What the Moon Saw," written by S. Rankin Drew and presented by a cast headed by Sidney Drew. In presenting the playlet Mr. Drew does not intend forsaking motion pictures for the legitimate stage, but wishes rather to enjoy the distinction of offering the patrons of the Vitagraph theater a pleasing novelty. Other Vita players in the cast are Jane Morrow, Edwina Robbins, Paul Scardon and J. Herbert Frank.

Bronson Howard Story Filmed

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

BRONSON HOWARD'S story, "Young Mrs. Winthrop," probably reads like an original plot in book form, but when it is stripped of its conversation and descriptions, and produced on the screen it is readily recognized as one of that class of domestic dramas whose action revolves about the misunderstanding caused by a husband's devoting his entire time and attention to business, neglecting to fulfill the duties of home life. The characters and settings are of a plane somewhat above the every-day walk in life, but in their two-reel film version the Edison company has made the story one to carry an appeal and message to everyone, financial and social position regardless.

The plot has been refreshened by little surprising developments here and there, and deepened by subtle touches of pathos and melodrama. The adverse criticism can all be confined to one scene, that in which the estranged couple meet to arrange the deed of separation. Whether the directing or cutting is at fault cannot be told from the film, but one is totally unprepared for the transformation that takes place when the lawyer recalls an event of the married couple's schooldays and early courtship. The barrier of frigidity that took months to accumulate melts instantly at this, and the pair who have come together with the serious intention of effecting a legal and permanent separation, are seen chatting and joking as though nothing had happened.

Following this is the climax, and the impression made by its clever simplicity effectively blots out the improbabilities of the scene preceding. The picture will make its debut to the film world on January 1. Under Richard Ridgely's direction Mabel Trunnelle, Robert Conness, Gladys Hulette, Harry Beaumont, and Bigelow Cooper interpret the principal parts in a most creditable manner. The subdued light effect in the death-bed scene is both artistic and impressive.

Winthrop's work demands his whole attention, and his pretty wife is consequently neglected and lonely. Time after time her husband breaks social engagements at the last moment because something comes up at the office that demands his attention at the time. Mrs. Winthrop bears it all silently, but such a state of affairs cannot last forever, and finally the cords of faith and patience snap.

Herbert, Mrs. Winthrop's brother, approaches

Winthrop one day and appeals for his help. It seems that a certain Mrs. Dunbar has trusted the young fellow with a large sum of money with which he speculates and loses. Winthrop promises to keep Herbert's secret, and writes Mrs. Dunbar for an appointment to try to arrange a settlement and save the boy.

She answers immediately, consenting to see him that night. It happens that Winthrop has promised to escort his wife to a ball on this same night, but he breaks the engagement, telling her that she had better stay home with their little daughter, Rosie. Mrs. Winthrop finds Mrs. Dunbar's note and, in a fit of anger, attends the ball in spite of her husband's wishes. During her absence Rosie is taken ill with fever. Mrs. Winthrop is informed of the child's condition, and rushes home, but the baby dies before she can reach it.

Winthrop succeeds in convincing Mrs. Dunbar that Herbert had no intention of stealing her money, and obtains her promise not to prosecute him. Happy with the result of his interview with the woman Winthrop is plunged into deep despair when, on arriving at home, he learns that his beloved Rosie is dead. From that time on he and his wife are as strangers to each other. No accusations are made, but inwardly each feels that but for the carelessness and neglect of the other it would never have happened.

Some time after the burial they meet to arrange the deed of separation. The lawyer who has known them both from childhood, tries several times to bring about a reconciliation by recalling to them certain little incidents that marked their early school days and courtship, but his efforts are wasted. As a last resort, after the whole deed has been made out, the lawyer asks how they intend to divide that little grave so lately filled. Pride cannot reign with this remembrance, and Mrs. Winthrop falls, weeping, into her husband's arms.

Did the Tavern Burn?

A man with a red face and a fur cap that pulls down over his ears and—most important of all—a state fire warden's badge, threatened to put a ban on the "College Widow" photoplay, being prepared by the Lubin Company.

He had nothing to say about the morality of the play, but he did say the woods about Betzwood, Pa., were as dry as tinder. He drew Barry O'Neil, the man who sets the big pictures, aside and said that he didn't think that the little tavern would burn down that day. He said that the tavern was a nice-looking thing, and it would be a shame to waste it. It would make a nice shelter for hunters upstate.

He also pointed out the fact that Betzwood is a dry wood, a very dry wood at this season of the year. In his official capacity he did not see how he could do his duty and let fire endanger it.

Barry got red in the face. He toyed with the fire warden's badge with his left hand and clenched his right fist. Then he leaned forward and talked right into the fire warden's eyes.

"My good and faithful officer, tell me how we can

Barry O'Neil and his company ready to take the fire scene in Lubin feature, "The College Widow."

rescue the college widow if we don't have a fire," said Barry in soft and Celtic tones. "That fire has to come off today. The ladies have to be rescued from the second-story windows. All of my little college boys, assisted by the Fairmount hook and ladder company of Norristown and Foreman Moody, of the fire house at Sixth and Locust streets, Philadelphia, are going to join the fair haired boys in the rescue. You bet they won't let the woods take fire."

"I don't see how it can be did," replied the fire warden, "although you got big town firemen."

O'Neil had spent six weeks making pictures of the play of George Ade. It is to be one of the Lubin features of the season. "Why," said Barry, "I am even paying the supers $3 a day and we have 200 of them. I got to get this fire through and in a hurry too."

That O'Neil meant what he said and that the fire warden finally saw the point is conclusively proven by one of the accompanying pictures.

Kleine Film Breaks Record

George Kleine's five-part subject, "The Naked Truth," featuring Lyda Borelli, broke the Kleine record last week when it played its seventieth engagement in the Chicago city limits. There are only two hundred theaters in Chicago with a seating capacity exceeding three hundred, which makes the record remarkable when the ratio of houses "killed" by a single engagement in a given neighborhood is considered. The Bijou Dream, adjoining the big Orpheum on State street, is playing an eight-day engagement with "The Naked Truth" and bookings continue to pour in steadily.

Activities at Bosworth Studios

Myrtle Stedman is doing double duty to make up for the time she laid off at the Bosworth studios in California. She is playing opposite to Macklyn Arbuckle in a four-reel comedy-drama and also a heavy lead in "Miss Kit Diadley's Caprice," in which Elsie Janis is being featured. Phillips Smalley is directing the one and Lois Weber the other. Hobart Bosworth is unfortunately sick at this time to everyone's regret.

Bushman Stars in "The Battle of Love"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

THE splendid acting of Francis X. Bushman and Ruth Stonehouse, and the delicious comedy touches which appear at every crisis, are the chief requisites of Essanay's three-reel production entitled "The Battle of Love," which will be released through the feature department of the General Film Company on Saturday, December 19. Added to this is a story which handles the eternal triangle in a refreshing manner, these things being blended together in such a manner that the result is three thousand feet of a most enjoyable subject.

Some time ago this company produced a photo-drama, the story of which appeared in the Ladies' World with a paragraph missing. In order to find this, the reader was required to see the screen version of the subject. The plan at once proved a success and "The Battle of Love" is the fourth of the series. The title, while it is an appealing one, does not appear to exactly fit the story, unless the action was altered in adapting it to the screen. Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, the prominent American authoress, originated the story.

The types for the leading roles could not have been selected to better advantage. As was mentioned earlier in the review, Mr. Bushman and Miss Stonehouse give excellent character portrayals, the former being especially effective in the scenes after his fiancee has rejected him and when he is accused of murder, and the latter being at her best in the many emotional scenes toward the close. Both the interior and exterior settings are in tune with the story and the photography is clear throughout the entire three reels of the subject.

Chandler is out of humor after Bessie has broken their engagement.

The story opens with the betrothal of Arthur Chandler and Bessie Wells. John Wells and Ezra Chandler, the fathers of the young couple, are pleased with the match, as they are staunch friends. The trouble starts when Vivian LaMar, an actress who likes Chandler because he amuses her, forces him to ride in her auto when he is on his way to visit Bessie.

Bessie clings to Chandler when he is "arrested."

From the window of her home the girl sees her fiance and the other woman drive up in the car. She rushes out and denounces Chandler, breaking their engagement without giving him a chance to explain that he cares nothing for the actress.

Old Chandler and Wells are gloomy over the new state of affairs and brood over their trouble at the club. Jack Sanford, known by his friends as "Mr. Fixit," sees them and persuades them to confide in him. He then offers to bet the two men a thousand dollars that within twenty-four hours he can have the young couple made man and wife. The older men accept the bet and Jack sets off to accomplish his purpose.

He secures the aid of the theatrical manager and Miss LaMar. The actress calls for Chandler at his office and, in a reckless mood, he goes with her to a cafe. Here the manager and Jack are waiting and stage a little scene to impress on Chandler's mind the fact that they have seen him with Miss LaMar. Still following Jack's plan, the actress takes Chandler for a ride in the country. When they are a few miles outside the city, she asks him to get some flowers for her and then drives off, leaving him to walk back.

When she returns to the cafe, Jack plays his next card by sending a message to Bessie, saying that the actress has been murdered and that Chandler was the last person seen with her. The girl forgets their quarrel in her anxiety to save her lover and telephones him to come to her home at once. Jack secures several of his friends to act as policemen and detectives and follow Chandler. Bessie tells Chandler of the suspicion which has been cast upon him and agrees to flee with him.

They are followed by the supposed detectives and eventually captured, and led to a shack in which Miss LaMar poses as a corpse. Jack is on hand and supplies a means of escape. He then tells them that he has a minister waiting on old Chandler's yacht and they must be married at once and leave for Europe. Both agree to this, but receive the surprise of their lives when, just after the ceremony has been completed aboard the yacht, their parents, Miss LaMar and her entire theatrical company step out from their hiding place and congratulate them. The entire affair is then explained to the astonished couple and Jack collects his wager, turning it over to Bessie as a wedding present.

The cast is as follows:

Arthur Chandler.....Francis X. Bushman
Bessie Wells.....Ruth Stonehouse
Vivian LaMar.....Lillian Drew
Jack Sanford, alias "Fixit".....Harry Dunkinson
John Wells.....Rapley Holmes
Ezra Chandler.....Thomas Cummerford
Mrs. Wells.....Helen Dunbar
Kirby.....Leo White

Big Interior Scene

What is alleged to be the biggest interior scene ever made anywhere was produced at the World Film studio at Fort Lee, New Jersey, on Saturday, November 28, by Director Maurice Tourneur. It was the Board of Trade scene, in the Wilton Lackaye photoplay based on the great stage success, "The Pit."

Board of Trade scene from World Film, "The Pit."

Five hundred men took part in the picture, and to add to the realism Director Tourneur secured the services of sixty brokers from Wall street, the New street curb, the Consolidated Exchange and the New York Stock Exchange. These brokers were under the direction of P. C. Mullen, 51 Exchange street. Several of the brokers had bought and sold wheat in the very pit which was being reproduced for the camera in the pit scenes. Forty Western Union and Postal messenger boys were used to add to the realism of the settings.

While greater numbers of men and women have been used before the camera, they have never been able to use so many men in an interior scene. In the spectacular pictures such as "Cabiria" or "Quo Vadis?" there are armies used in exterior settings but not a single one reproduces an interior. The pit scene is an achievement that the World Film Corporation can well be proud of and Director Tourneur can boast of another feather in his hat. Having staged the delightful fantasy showing Vivian Martin in "The Wishing Ring," it was no easy matter to turn to the wider scope afforded by the Brady version of "The Pit."

Filming "Graustark"

Miss Beverly Bayne, Miss Helen Dunbar and Thomas Commerford left for New York on December 5 to join Francis X. Bushman, who went to New York early in the week, to take scenes in Essanay's new photoplay "Graustark," by George Barr McCutcheon.

Francis X. Bushman will play the leading role, that of Grenfall Lorry, the young American who falls in love with a princess of "Graustark." Miss Bayne will be the princess and Thomas Commerford and Miss Dunbar will take the parts of her uncle and aunt, who are traveling through America with her.

The scene in which Lorry rushes to New York to get a last glimpse of his princess, whose rank he is entirely ignorant of, will be taken on the wharves of the Atlantic liners to make it absolutely true to the story. The players will then go to Washington where all the scenes that took place there in the story will be reproduced with exactness to the text.

New York Exhibitors Meet

A mass meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York was held at the Marlborough Hotel, on Wednesday morning, Dec. 2, 1914. Matters relative to legislation for the coming year were taken under consideration and a legislation committee was appointed, with Mr. Rosenson as its chairman, for the purpose of drafting a bill for the admission of minors in motion picture theaters and also a bill permitting standees, which the exhibitors will endeavor to have passed during this legislative term.

The matter of the ball was taken up and much enthusiasm was exhibited by the exhibitors for the hearty co-operation which the manufacturers and tradesmen have extended. After matters relative to the ball have been straightened out the entire Association will be re-organized in accordance with the new constitution and by-laws, and its principles will be strictly adhered to.

Alliance Invades Canada

Andrew J. Cobe, general manager of the Alliance Films Corporation, has just returned from Montreal, where he has concluded arrangements with the Noted Players Feature Film Company to handle all of the Alliance releases in the Dominion. J. D. Goldie, the head of the Noted Players, will shortly have, in addition to the Montreal exchange, fully equipped offices in Toronto and Winnipeg. These are to be followed by other branches in the larger Canadian centers. The projected offices will be located in St. Johns, Calgary and Regina. The St. Johns office will handle the Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward's Island territory. Winnipeg will take care of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia.

PICTURE THEATER ADVERTISING.

THE amount of newspaper advertising that should be done by picture theaters is a problem deserving more thought than it usually gets. Without doubt there should be more of it than there is; and unquestionably much of what is done is useless. It is the easiest thing in the world to waste money on newspaper space; but it is almost as easy to lose big opportunities by neglecting to use any space, or by using it in the wrong way.

As a general proposition it may be said that in a city small enough so that its theaters are within convenient reach of its total population, advertising in the city's newspapers would be a good investment for any of the theaters. It is equally plain that in cities as big as Chicago, Philadelphia, Cleveland, St. Louis, etc., theaters in the south end of town cannot hope to interest people who live in the north end. Time and inconvenience are not so much of a factor of this condition as the fact that the same or an equivalent show may be had within a few minutes of home. Therefore, in such a city a south side theater (that is to say, any neighborhood theater) advertising in a newspaper which circulated all over town would be wasting at least two-thirds of the advertising it was paying for. Yet we find a considerable amount of this kind of advertising being done—probably because the arguments of the newspapers' advertising salesmen have been accepted without due consideration.

On the other hand, it is perfectly reasonable to assume that all the inhabitants of any large city go "down-town" with considerable frequency. So a down-town theater, located in or near the retail shopping district, might well profit by a judicious amount of general newspaper advertising. Briefly stated, the picture theater should confine its advertising to newspapers which reach only those people who either reside or regularly visit in the neighborhood of that particular theater.

In the smaller cities and towns that condition is easily met, since practically the whole population is within easy reach of every theater. In such communities every reader of the newspapers is a prospective visitor at every theater in town.

Waterloo, Iowa, is a city of some 28,000 population. That is big enough to make a good picture theater town and small enough so that everybody knows where the Palace Theater is. For three days around the first of this month that house ran "Cabiria"; and on the 29th of November, Sunday, the Waterloo Times-Tribune carried a full-page advertisement of the Palace and its feature show.

Now a full page in a Sunday paper is considerable advertising for a picture theater. A good many of the conservative type of business men would argue that it was a foolish and vain expenditure of money. They would say that everybody in Waterloo knew the Palace; that most of them saw it every few days at least; and that an announcement on the front of the house, or possibly a small notice in the paper, would have served just as well. But there is another side to advertising that the ultra-conservative people never learn, but that the management of the Palace evidently knows. It is a proven fact that the country cross-roads store, whose business is a monopoly to which the people must go and whose whole stock is known to everybody, can nevertheless increase its business by advertising.

A man may be thoroughly familiar with all the facts about a certain theater; he may be aware that the theater is showing something exceptionally fine; but still he may not overcome his inertia to the extent of actually attending the show. But if a friend drops in to see him and suggests that he should see that show, or asks him to go, his chances of attending are increased ten-fold. And that is just what the well prepared newspaper advertisement does; that is what the Palace's full page in the Waterloo Times-Tribune did. Naturally it did not read that way at all; but the message it carried to the people was something like this:

"Of course you know about this show the Palace is giving, but I just want to remind you that it is the biggest thing that ever struck Waterloo. So don't make any dates that will keep you away from it. Sure, all the folks are going. Better call up and have 'em save you a seat or two before they're all gone."

In a town of that size, and with a feature show of that kind, there is no doubt that a full page newspaper announcement is good picture theater advertising. With an ordinary, every day program it wouldn't be. In a very large city it wouldn't be. But even the regular program deserves some advertising, and in a small city a moderate sized notice run continuously is a good investment. And in the largest cities there are frequently published little weekly neighborhood papers whose advertising rates are very low and whose usefulness as an advertising medium for the picture theater is far ahead of that of the big dailies.

No advertising is any good unless it reaches the people who can use it, and only those people. Within this limit newspaper advertising is a good investment for picture theaters.

MUNICIPAL PICTURE SHOWS

FREE motion picture shows operated by cities for the benefit of the population in general, just as band concerts are now conducted, are by no means a new idea. A good many public workers have advocated, and are still advocating them. The latest report of this nature comes from Milwaukee, where Prof. Richard Burton, of the University of Minnesota, spoke at some length on the subject before the City Club.

Whether any of these projects ever come to a head or not is really of little consequence to the picture theater owner. The free city show is the least of any of his competition. The reasons for this are obvious.

In the first place, no city commission charged with the duty of putting on a free show would be willing to pay for a daily change and a good program. It costs more money to run a picture theater properly than it does to run a dance hall or even a band concert; and unless it is run properly, and is at least as good as the average nickel show, the people will not attend even on a free admission.

Motion picture entertainment is cheap enough, anyway. Most people would rather pay a ridiculously small admission fee to a regular theater than go into a city-operated substitute for nothing. And those who did attend the free show because it was free would either become fans on the spot (if it was a good show) and extend their enthusiasm to the regular picture theaters, or would become so disgusted (if it was a poor show) that they would be forced to go to the regular exhibitor for real entertainment. The free show can't hurt the live exhibitor.

The Alliance Films Corp. has just completed negotiations with the Progressive Investment Company, of Portland, Oregon, to handle the Alliance program in the western states.

"The Secret of the Haunted Hills"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

ZUDORA, the girl detective, solves another mystery of the many given her by her uncle, Hassan Ali, in episode four of the Thanhouser series, which is entitled "The Secret of the Haunted Hills."

Before she succeds in finding the cause of the appearance of a spectre-like hand which terrifies the natives in a certain rural community, she is set upon and all but throttled by an idiot boy, employed by John Storm's parents as a stable hand.

Margaret Snow, Harry Benham and James Cruze are the featured characters and the photography in this episode is very pleasing.

The story begins with John Storm receiving a note from his mother, explaining that the people in the rural community in which she resides are being terrified by the sudden and mysterious appearance at night of a monstrous, fleshless, skeleton hand which they are unable to explain by any known means and which strikes terror to their minds upon its very appearance.

Storm thereupon visits his home, accompanied by Zudora, his sweetheart, and there beholds the spectre hand himself, as it flashes on the wall of the living room.

When Storm's father grabs up his gun and shoots at the uncanny apparition, the bullet hurtles through the wall and injures the servant maid in the arm. This incident recalls to Storm's mind a happening of his boyhood, when he accidentally shot a little lad while out hunting and injured him in the hand, much after the fashion in which the servant maid has just been injured. This lad, now grown to manhood, is employed on his father's place as a stable hand, even though he is half-witted and unable to assume the real tasks of a man.

Storm and Zudora, returning to the city, believe that Hassan Ali is at the bottom of the strange happening, although they have no proof that such is the case. Storm accuses Hassan Ali and when the Hindoo is about to shoot him, Storm manages to seize his arm and bend him back across a table top. The Hindoo's servant comes to the rescue of his master and is about to stab Storm in the back when Zudora appears and rescues her lover.

Storm then returns to his parents' home in the country and explains to the excited group of farmers armed with shotguns, crowbars, pitchforks, and other implements, seized at haphazard, that the mystery will soon be solved, as Zudora, the famous girl detective, is coming to their rescue. Zudora is warmly greeted upon her arrival, and after a brief investigation decides to visit the upper room of one of the farm's outbuildings, as she has a suspicion that it is from there that the strange apparition is caused to appear.

Zudora and Storm discover the stereopticon.

Entering this building, Zudora is seized by the idiot boy, bound and gagged, and is about to be hung up to a rafter, when Storm arrives and overpowers the idiot boy.

Ascending to the second floor of the out-building, they discover a huge stereopticon and a slide bearing on its surface the X-ray photograph of the idiot boy's hand which had been taken at the time Storm shot him many years before. A test of the machine quickly proves that this slide, packed in the machine, and the light turned on, caused the mysterious skeleton hand to appear in whatever direction the rays from the machine were projected. The mystery solved, Zudora and Storm return to the city, while the countryside settles back into its usual calm.

New Favorite Players' Director

William D. Taylor, the new director of the Favorite Players' Film Co., has actually assumed charge of the studio in Los Angeles, and will hereafter direct all of the Carlyle Blackwell pictures. Mr. Taylor was born in Ireland, educated at Clifton College, England, went to France and Germany to study languages, and finally came to America and ranched in southwest Kansas. Returning to England he met Charles Hawtrey, the famous actor, and, although not quite nineteen, joined his company and played in "The Private Secretary." After playing with a number of traveling companies in the old country, Mr. Taylor again crossed to America and joined Fanny Davenport, playing juveniles and understudying the leading roles at the same time. Later he joined the Castle Square Stock Company in Boston, acted with Katherine Kidder in "Madame Sans Gene" on the road, and with Sol Russell in repertoire, and has been with a number of high-class stock companies. His last legitimate engagement was with Harry Corson Clarke in Honolulu. He started his motion picture career with the Kay Bee forces at Santa Monica, and then joined the Vitagraph, where he did some important work, including the name part in "Captain Alvarez." He next went with the Balboa company at Long Beach, where he directed and took his own leads for some months, and where he established a reputation as a producer. William Taylor is very much a man—athletic, tall and well built. He has an all-around love of sports, and is a prominent member of the Photoplayers' Club and a general favorite.

Playing "Cabiria"

W. L. Myers, manager of the new Palace theater at Waterloo, Iowa, which was recently described in these columns, sends us this week his four-page program announcing his showing of the great Itala film "Cabiria," which he offered his patrons on Monday Tuesday, and Wednesday, November 30 and December 1 and 2. The program contains a complete cast, a short synopsis of the story and several illustrations of the principal scenes. During the three days mentioned above prices of twenty-five cents are charged for general admission and 400 seats on the main floor are reserved at thirty-five cents.

Kleine Furnishes Travelogue

The Tuesday Art and Travel Club, an organization of Chicago society women, held an interesting travelogue lecture at the Hotel Sherman recently. George Kleine supplied the film from his large stock of educational subjects. "Places Loved by d'Annunzio, the Poet," "Important Scenes in Paris," "The Rhine from Cologne to Coblentz," "Winter Sports at St. Moritz," and "Conquering the Jung-Frau," were the film selections. Tomaso's orchestra supplied the music. Now that it cannot go to Europe in person, society is taking optical journeys into favorite haunts via science's fastest pleasure.

Dyreda to Film Harris Ballads

An interesting announcement is that of the Dyreda Company which has acquired the picture rights to the Charles K. Harris world-record songs, "Just Break the News to Mother," "Always in the Way" and others of his famous ballads. Work is about to begin on the filming of these two numbers. They offer big possibilities in the way of features with a heart-interest that is certain and the one-time popularity of these songs suggests a market already assured. The Dyreda studio on the Clara Morris estate at Yonkers, will be the scene of the films' making.

Another Jefferson Picture

The Alco Film Corporation announces that the production of Popular Plays and Players, Inc., to follow Madame Olga Petrova in "The Tigress" will be Thomas Jefferson and Adelaide Thurston in the famous melodrama "Shadows of a Great City" in photoplay form. Mr. Jefferson already has had the pleasure of appearing in a work by his father, Joseph Jefferson, the Alco release "Rip Van Winkle," and now he is to repeat the experience. For "Shadows of a Great City" was written by Joseph Jefferson too, in collaboration with L. R. Shewell, who was for many years stage manager at the old Boston theater. It was produced more than twenty years ago and was seen over the entire country for years. Its story is now standard and a delightful memory with many older theatergoers.

Miss Thurston, the co-star with Mr. Jefferson, has a large following over the country too. She has starred in the legitimate in a number of Cohan and Harris productions, notably "Sweet Clover" and "The Girl from Over Yonder." She also played Lady Babbie in J. M. Barrie's "Little Minister."

Engage Important Cast

The Famous Players has gathered an unusually important cast of Broadway favorites in support of John Barrymore in the forthcoming production, "Are You a Mason?" Leo Ditrichstein's sensationally successful farce. This notable cast includes Alfred Hickman, who created the original "Billy" in the stage presentation of this play, Charles Dixon, Charles Butler, Ida Waterman, Dodson Mitchell, Helen Freeman, Jean Acker, Lorraine Huling, Harold Lockwood and Kitty Baldwin.

Want Lobby Bulletins?

Upon the request of many exhibitors throughout the country, the Famous Players Film Company has recontinued the publication and issue of the special lobby bulletins which were sent in advance of this company's releases last year. Beginning with the release of "The Conspiracy," exhibitors can again obtain these bulletins by sending a request to the Famous Players Film Company, or at their local exchanges.

Motography's Gallery of Picture Players

ELSIE ESMOND, leading woman for Wharton, Inc., was born and raised in Chicago. Although an American by birth, she is of English-Russian parentage. Miss Esmond is an all-around athlete but her favorite sports are swimming and riding. She was well known on the stage before appearing in pictures, two of her engagements having been as leading woman with Francis Wilson in "The Dollar Mark" and as the leading support of Madame Nazimova. She has a splendid stock following from coast to coast, having played and been featured in engagements in most of the large cities in the United States. Proof of her popularity lies in the fact that she daily receives letters from all parts of the country from admirers and takes pride in answering them all—an achievement requiring no little amount of work and patience. Miss Esmond is seen to advantage in "The Boundary Rider."

Elsie Esmond.

THURLOW BERGEN'S ancestors came from New Jersey, but he was educated in Washington, D. C. When nineteen years old, he decided to give up the study of law and go on the stage, and now has fourteen years stage experience to his credit. Mr. Bergen is also an author, playwright, composer, singer and athlete. He has written many children's stories, and as a boy composed the lyric and music of the well known song "Esther's Lullaby" which he played and sang at the White House for the late President Cleveland who gave Mr. Bergen permission to dedicate the song to his first daughter, "Esther," a distinct compliment. Pathe was responsible for his deserting the legitimate stage, and his first picture was the splendid Pathe American Company production entitled "The Stain." For the past six months he has been appearing in leads for Theodore Wharton, Inc.

Thurlow Bergen.

MR. O. PENN'S appearance in the Pathe-Wharton production, "The Warning," will not soon be forgotten, for the sturdy, square-jawed man in the prime of life was clearly seen to shed tears over his erring "son's" conduct. Mr. Penn was born in the United States in 1870, and having pronounced artistic talent went to Paris to complete his education. While there he became attracted to the stage and joined the company of the Theater Guignol in Paris in 1896. After two years there he traveled in repertoire with the great actor, Coquelin, for six years covering Belgium, Italy, France, Germany and French Africa. From the Sarah Bernhardt theater he went into the moving picture field and spent three years with the house of Pathe in France. Returning to America, he joined the Pathe forces here, and has, for the last few months, been appearing with Pathe-Wharton.

M. O. Penn.

CREIGHTON HALE, who has appeared in a number of Pathe American productions, as well as in those made by the Whartons, was born twenty-five years ago in Ireland, being the son of an actor well known in Great Britain. He made his debut at the age of five years in "East Lynne" and when barely out of his "teens," he staged a production of "Richelieu" at the Waldon theater, London. With Oscar Asche and Lilly Brayton he played Shakesperian repertoire in London and the provinces. He came to this country to support Gertrude Elliott in the "Dawn of Tomorrow," and with that play toured practically every state in the Union. Among the other well known productions in which he has appeared are "Rebellion," "The Witching Hour," and "Indian Summer." He also had a ten months' engagement with the Ben Greet Players.

New York Exhibitors' Annual Ball

Thousands in Attendance

YOU exhibitors who know the actual size of the Grand Central Palace will appreciate the statement that it was none too big for the holding of the fifth annual ball of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York. Four floors of the Palace were at the service of the Association and its guests on the evening of December seventh—yet, the great convention-floor, on which three separate dances were conducted at the same time was one which of necessity, limited the dancers to about one-twentieth of the attendance number. Three tiers of booths lined the hall that claims thousands of square feet as its area and these booths as well as the dancing floor, had extensive patronage.

The event was the first of a social nature under the management of the Association's new president, William Landau. He made many new acquaintances among the evening's guests and the general feeling was one of instant liking for the man who stepped into the presidency on the resignation of Samuel H. Trigger. The latter gentleman was in animated attendance and seemed to find as much enjoyment in freedom from responsibility for the evening's outcome, as did the many who call him friend. As early as one year ago, Mr. Trigger engaged the Palace for December seventh's event and saw it through as a member of various committees.

The evening's biggest happening was the grand march with twelve photoplayers in the lead. The front row stretched its twice-sextetted width across the space secured only by guards constituting themselves a bodyguard. And the front row was truly the "cynosure of admiring eyes." Mary Pickford in a sequen-encrusted, chiffon-tuniced gown of faintest pink, with Francis X. Bushman as her partner were at the right of the front row and Mary Fuller in golden-brocade, walked beside King Baggot at the left of the "row de luxe." The center comprised Clara Kimball Young in modanna-blue stiff silk and a sapphire-set comb as her hair-ornament. Her hand rested on the arm of Paul Panzer. Next in line was Mary Charleson in orchid-chiffon and satin, with Marc MacDermott. Marguerite Snow was queenly in a cloth-of-gold gown embroidered in silver and she wore a picturesque hat of silver lace. James Cruze was her partner. Corresponding to the Snow-Cruze position in the row were Anita Stewart, in a lusterless and pastel pink, and Earl Williams. The women carried bouquets of American beauties, the gift of the ball committee, and afterward the flowers served as favors to friends.

Among the "afterward" events, was a buffet supper served down-stairs in the grill and it was not until after four o'clock that the last of the ball took its way homeward. It was a happy, satisfying evening, that of the Association's fifth ball that provided four orchestras, four picture-theaters, an innovation grand march and a splendid time for the entertainment of the guests who surely numbered more than three thousand.

NOTES OF THE EVENING.

The officers of the association who made the ball a memorable one are William Landau, president; M. Needle, vice-president of Manhattan; William Hollander, vice-president of Brooklyn; M. Coleman, vice-president of the Bronx; Adolph Weiss, secretary; William Brant, financial secretary; Grant Anson, treasurer; A. J. Stockhammer, Samuel H. Trigger, chairman of the Executive Board, and Adolph Weiss, chairman of the ball committee.

Marion S. Pearce, president of the National Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was a guest from Baltimore.

Fulton Brylawski, secrtary of the Washington, D. C., league, was another guest to whom distance meant nothing.

Francis X. Bushman's attendance meant his coming from Chicago. He learned that his Essanay fame has grown, even since the June convention tribute to his popularity.

And Kate Price was there. Her gown was very lovely and her chiffon scarf was very green. Kate believes in leaving none in doubt as to her nationality.

Nicholas Power's personal representatives were J. F. Skerret and A. J. Lang.

"Bill" Barry was missed.

Ad. Kessal and C. O. Baumann were hosts to a merry party in the New York Motion Picture Company's box.

The Warners' box was a big and well-filled one.

James Kirkwood, president of the Screen Club, declared the night a ladies' one at the club. Those who taxied there before three, found it so. Those who didn't, found it dark.

Paul Panzer was cautious and 'phoned at 3:30, thus saving his party a useless trip.

At three, on the other side of the screen in the grill room, King Baggot assured James Cruze and "Bill" Swanson that he would speak for life memberships in the club for them.

Edward Earle of the Edison Company was the first photoplayer to make a formal bow from the stage in the dance hall.

The Edison booth was the home of lots of fun as the evening advanced. William Maxwell, second vice-president of the Edison Company, held an auction of players and the interest of a large audience.

C. H. Wilson, first vice-president and general manager of the Edison Company, was present, together with Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Plympton, Charles Edison and L. W. McChesney, as Orange representatives.

Those from the studio comprised Marc MacDermott, Mabel Trunelle, Herbert Prior, Dick Tucker, Gertrude McCoy, Edward Earle, Viola Dana, "Artie" Houseman, Gus Phillips, Robert Conness, Bigelow Cooper, Harry Eytinge, Edward O'Connor, H. Beaumont, Saul Harrison, Sally Crute, Gladys Hulette, M. Baring, John Collins, Ashley Miller and Frank A. Bannon.

Though the night was the second one of a cold, sleety rain, it kept few away.

W. "Kalem" Wright was welcomed by those who have helped make motion picture history. Tom Moore was another Kalemite in attendance.

Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Zukor list the evening as among their big number of pleasant ones.

Mary Pickford, in a white velvet coat and white fox furs nibbled a sandwich and sipped ginger ale while waiting for her "family," her mother and sister and brother, to announce their readiness to go home.

Harry Reichenbach's presence bespoke the Alco Company, though that company contributed others to the evening's number.

Though "Rosie" (Rosenbach-Excelsior) was a late departing guest, he answered his office 'phone at nine that same morning. There are some others who will respond "Ditto." But did they?

Paul Kelly and Carl Gregory said cheery hellos to everybody.

S. M. Spedon and many other Vitagraphers held court in a large box.

And David Horsley commuted in from Bayonne and took a one-something back.

"Bill" Russell was greeted like a long-lost brother by everybody. Feature film leads and Florida trips prevent his friends seeing him as often as they would wish.

And Charlie Horan was in receipt of the universal greeting, "How fine you're looking!" Then he'd explain he's in training.

The Universal Company was represented by Mark Dittenfass, Paul Gulick and a number of others.

'Twas a happy party and a happy time!

H. S. Levine, who publicities and writes ad copy for Box Office Attractions, was one of those who stood outside of the crowd and watched the players being introduced.

Paul Panzer had the distinction of being the only "villain" in the front row of the grand march. He received a loud burst of applause when introduced, so probably villains are regular fellows after all.

And Clark was not there, and they missed him. Housman thinks that possibly it was a case of too much Boston with Clark.

Russell K. Dougherty, Edwin August, Tom Terriss, Anna Luther, Bliss Milford, Ira H. Simmons, Alma Martin, John Spooner, Jerome Wilson, Arthur Bisgood, Beulah Poynter and "Jack" Cunningham, all associated with the Kinetophote and the K. C. Booking Company, Incorporated, were to be found in box No. 106.

Big Publicity Campaign

The Mica Film Corporation, which is one of the newest programs recently announced in the motion picture industry, now makes public for the first time an arrangement it has made with the National Newspaper Dramatic Service Bureau of New York, of which Myron C. Fagan is editor-in-chief and which represents the dramatic departments of approximately 18,000 American newspapers.

It is planned to inaugurate a nation wide advertising and publicity campaign in the newspapers all over the United States relative to Kriterion pictures, and the houses exhibiting them. Though it is expected that such a campaign will require an expenditure in the neighborhood of $500,000 per year, the Mica Film Corporation considers that the co-operation between the manufacturers and the exhibitors is the surest, fairest and most practical method of marketing its product and that, therefore, the expenditure is well justified.

The exhibitor it is said, will be asked to pay nothing extra for this advertising service, as the service will be stipulated and guaranteed in every Kriterion contract made out and as a result, in every town where Kriterion pictures are to be shown there will be advertising in the newspaper which is a part of Mr. Fagan's service, the advertising to introduce Kriterion pictures to the public and announce the name and location of the theater in that locality which will show Kriterion films.

Kinetophote's New Affiliation

The Kinetophote has just completed arrangements with the Hollandia Film Manufacturing Co., of Haarlem, Holland, whereby the Kinetophote will take over such of the Hollandia pictures as are available for the United States, Canada and New Foundland. Such films as the Kinetophote takes over will be released through the K. C. Booking Co., Incorporated, in the United States and the K. C. Booking Co., Limited, of Montreal, as well as through the exchanges affiliated with the K. C. Company.

Jan Leendertz, representative of the Hollandia Company, arrived in this country on the Rotterdam a week or more ago, bringing with him 25,000 feet of film, a part of which was accepted by the Kinetophote as being of sufficient merit to take with American audiences. It was stated at the Kinetophote offices that none of the Hollandia film is to be taken which does not come up to such specifications and, therefore, such of the film as was accepted is replete enough with action and good photography to make it available for the American market.

Mr. Leendertz, who is an expert in the land of dykes on the question of motion pictures, is stopping at the McAlpin, but expects to return to Holland on the Nieuw Amsterdam when that ship sails on December 12. Mr. Leendertz talks most interestingly of conditions in the business there which have arisen as the result of the war.

"Our company is the only concern in Holland manufacturing films and we find an excellent market for our output," said Mr. Leendertz. "We do not, however, market any of our films ourselves; we sell through the oldest agent in Holland, who distributes films all over Holland and Dutch colonies. We do not have the proposition of a feature every day in many motion picture theaters, such as you do here. In Holland a theater books a feature for one week or, at the most, two each week.

"After the war broke out there was a great boom in the motion picture trade because so many of what you call the legitimate theaters were closed. At once there was a demand for a cheaper amusement and the motion pictures supplied it. However, prices were lowered a little in the film houses, due to the depression caused by the war, and because there was a fear that Holland might be dragged into it. Now we know that we shall not be implicated in the controversy, and things were brightening up to a considerable extent when I left.

"We try to get stars for our pictures the same as you do in this country right now. For instance, in one or two of the films which we have brought to the Kinetophote Corporation, we used H. L. Chrispijn, director of the Royal Theater in Amsterdam. He not only was the star of the piece but directed the picture. We were very fortunate to get him, because usually his time is all taken up at the Royal Theater. We made no films at all during August after the outbreak of the war, but we got going again in October and our plant is working to full capacity now."

Cameragraph Club Gives Party

A delightful package party was given at Eldert hall, in Brooklyn, Saturday evening, December 5, under the auspices of the Cameragraph Club, and was an unqualified success. The Cameragraph Club is composed of the foreman of each factory department of the Nicholas Power Company, the superintendent, the purchasing agent, the stock clerk and also the executive secretary of the company. Nicholas Power himself was present and made a splendid speech, praising the work of the foremen of his organization and his remarks were very well received. Mr. Power was followed by Mr. Cassard, who, speaking for the entire assembly, thanked Mr. Power for his kind expressions and voiced the appreciation of the club for his untiring interest in the welfare of his men. Speeches were also made by Mr. Uhlemann, the superintendent, and Ray Dengel, the chairman of the entertainment committee. There was plenty of refreshments and dancing was enjoyed until a late hour. The officers of the club are Theodore Uhlemann, president; H. Tonnerson, vice-president; S. S. Cassard, treasurer, and A. J. Lang, secretary. Honorary members of the club are Nicholas Power, Edward Earl, J. F. Skerrett and Will C. Smith.

Report Big Increases

That theater owners share the optimistic opinions of newspapers and certain prominent financiers of greatly increased prosperity after January 1, is indicated by the flattering reports from George Kleine's widely scattered branch offices. All of them are sending in heavy booking sheets with the cheering information that most theaters are already feeling the new prosperity in the resumption of manufacturing activities in many towns and cities. "Julius Caesar," "Antony and Cleopatra," "Spartacus," and "The Naked Truth," are booked solid into the middle of February in several of the far western offices.

Darwin Karr

Darwin Karr is now well started on his second year with the Vitagraph Company, where he has been engaged principally in Broadway Star features, but also in shorter pictures. Mr. Karr was born at Karr Valley, near Rochester, New York, and was eighteen years old and a superintendent in a knitting mill before the stage microbe bit him. Then for several years he appeared in prominent roles in dramas, musical comedies and vaudeville sketches. It was in the summer of 1911 that he first thought of motion picture work and accepted a special engagement with the Edison Company. The result was a one-year contract with the Solax Company, which by his good work lengthened into two years, and in September, 1913, the Vitagraph Company bid for his services and secured them. "Mr. Barnes of New York" and "The Tangle" are two Vitagraph features in which he has been seen. At present Mr. Karr is working on another Broadway star feature soon to be released.

Darwin Karr.

Another "Gar el Hama" Film

In the Great Northern Film Company's latest release, "The Adventures of Gar El Hama," the central character is one that figured as a principal in two former Great Northern features about two years ago, at which time the pictures attained unusual popularity. The new production should likewise prove popular among the exhibitors and fans who admired the other Gar El Hama photoplays. The title role is also portrayed this time by the distinguished European actor, A. Hertel, who appeared as Gar El Hama in the former productions. He is the same one who scored such a hit in the recent Great Northern feature, "After Thirty Years," by his wonderful characterization of a difficult part. The new picture is said to be unusually thrilling as well as elaborate. Some novel and wonderful photographic effects are introduced.

New Photoplay Textbook

Within the past week there came from the press the first edition of "How to Write a Photoplay," the book upon which A. W. Thomas, president of the Photoplaywrights' Association of America, editor of the Photoplay Scenario, the Photoplay Magazine, author of "Photoplay Helps and Hints" and "The Photoplay Punch," and a member of the Photoplay Authors' League, the Screen and the Ed-Au clubs, has been at work for more than a year. The book contains 327 pages of most interesting text, and Mr. Thomas in his fluent style tells the amateur what to do rather than what not to do, as so many other writers on photoplay technique seem inclined to go at the subject. Mr. Thomas' book is constructive in every sense of the word and should prove a very treasurehouse of knowledge for the struggling amateur, who is seeking to find the reason for the continued rejection of his efforts. The book, which is neatly bound in olive green, bears on its title page an appreciation, in which the author expresses his thanks to such writers as Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, William Lord Wright, Ben P. Schulberg, Russell E. Smith, Elizabeth R. Carpenter and William E. Wing for courtesies extended in the preparation of the work.

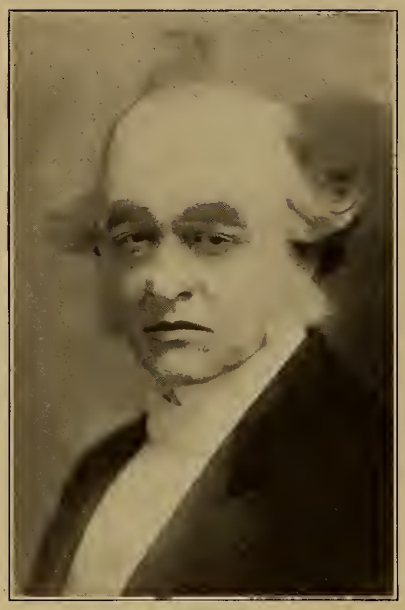
The preface is a tribute such as falls to few authors. It was written by Ben Schulberg, scenario editor of the Famous Players Film Company and reads as follows:—

To write the preface to a book such as this is a privilege to be exceeded only by the honor of writing the book itself. It is unnecessary to say that the present volume is the best textbook on the writing of the photoplay ever published, for after a perusal of the following pages that statement would appear altogether superfluous, but the writer wishes very much indeed to confide to you that Mr. A. W. Thomas has, through the medium of this book, accomplished two unique achievements—he has written the complex truth and logic of the scenario, so that the amateur photoplaywright can understand and embrace them; and he has been faithful to himself and his readers. He has religiously and consistently avoided exaggeration—the glaring fault in most similar works—and yet he has not omitted a single item either of direct benefit or remote value to the prospective or present student of the photoplay.

For all those struggling in the dark of misconception and confusion toward the hidden light of photoplay perfection, Mr. Thomas has illuminated the way with the brilliance of his profound reflections and the firm conclusions of long years of study and mastery of his subject. It is not difficult to perceive the psychic truth underlying all his statements, an unconscious force born only of sincerity in and devotion to his labors. The writer is happy to state that he is familiar with Mr. Thomas' own work and continuous, untiring efforts to aid every struggling writer who sought or would accept his assistance; and that spirit of service permeates every page of this book.

In including a chapter which he calls "A Talk with the Reader," its author presents a feature as valuable in itself as most other volumes devoted to the scenario in their entirety. To Mr. A. W. Thomas, the loyal, sincere and conscientious friend of all students of the motion picture technique, the undersigned as a photoplaywright and scenario editor extends his earnest thanks for this uplifting and instructive book, and to all its readers the expectant hope that they may profit as much as he did by it.

Clamor for Kleine's Caesar



One of the truly surprising features in the booking of George Kleine's "Julius Caesar," the various Kleine offices report, is the tremendous nation-wide interest evinced by colleges, academies, technical and public schools in the big film. The fame of "Quo Vadis?" and "Antony and Cleopatra" has gone before, and the announcement that "Julius Caesar" is greater than either of the others from the standpoint of spectacle and historical accuracy has created a widespread interest. From Boston to Los Angeles public school superintendents have arranged dates for exhibitions. In this way exhibitors showing the subject for the first time in their respective cities are getting profitable special matinees.

Raver and Thomas Leave All Star

As MOTOGRAPHY goes to press we are advised that Harry R. Raver and Augustus Thomas have disposed of their stock in the All Star Feature Corporation and severed connections with that concern. Mr. Raver is responsible for the importation of "Cabiria" and is the general manager of the Itala Film Company of America. Mr. Thomas is universally known as a playwright for the legitimate stage, the All Star pictures being his first venture in filmland.

Digby Bell's Successful Career

Digby Bell, the star of the Alco release, "The Education of Mr. Pipp," makes his screen debut in that photoplay. He has had many experiences besides those that usually fall to an actor. He was born the son of a banker and later he became a banker himself. He followed this by becoming a member of the stock exchange. He was also general passenger agent of the White Star Line in New York as a very young man. Mr. Bell was born in Milwaukee in 1851 and reached New York at the age of five. After his graduation from college he entered upon the business career of which reference is made above. In 1872 he went to Italy determined to study for the career of a grand opera singer. He was abroad for five years, but in 1876 he felt ready for his operatic debut. This occurred in the Island of Malta. He sang "the Count" in "La Somnambula" and "Valentine" in "Faust." He also sang in "La Traviata" and "Linda" during his residence abroad. Several years later he returned to America to appear as a concert singer at Chickering Hall, New York. A tour of the principal American cities followed. His initial success in comic opera in "Pinafore" was followed by many other instantaneous successes. He was John Wellington Wells in "The Sorcerer" and delighted the public in "Trial by Jury." A three years' engagement with the singing company of the late Augustin Daly followed. In 1884 he was King Charles in "Nell Gwynne" at the Casino. Then came four years with the McCaul Opera Company. Comic opera stardom came to Bell in May 1892 when he appeared in the title role in "Jupiter" at the Casino. Having sung and played in grand and comic opera and light opera, Bell turned to the legitimate and was just as successful as he had been in the musical pieces. With his wife, Laura Joyce he starred in Hoyt's "Midnight Bell." He made his first acquaintance in a professional capacity with Augustus Thomas in 1898 when he played Doctor Willow in "The Hoosier Doctor," by that playwright. In 1893 he was Sam Weller in "Mr. Pickwick," delving into musical comedy for a change. Later came his starring tour in "The Education of Mr. Pipp" which lasted for three years.

Fielding Busy

To commence four big features, two of them of five-reel length, and produce them practically simultaneously, is a feat that is seldom attempted or encouraged among film producers. Romaine Fielding, producer, author and leading man for the Lubin Company, has accomplished this feat, however, and this in spite of the fact that he is not a believer in rushing a film through. "In the Hour of Disaster," in five reels, "The Disaster," in five reels, "The Brute in the Jug," in two reels and "The Valley of Lost Hope" in six reels, are the titles of the plays in question. The two first named have just been completed, and will shortly be released by the Lubin company. The last two named are still in preparation. All the plays were commenced the same day, Mr. Fielding plays the leads, besides being the director.

Reproduced "Cabbage Patch"

The "Cabbage Patch" of Louisville, Ky., made famous in the novel by Mrs. Alice Hegan Rice, was reproduced in the outskirts of San Rafael, north of San Francisco, Calif., to give a setting for the photoplay, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." Much of the success of the moving picture is dependent on the faithfulness with which such a scene is depicted. The California Motion Picture Corporation, which filmed "Mrs. Wiggs," threw the best of its resources into the construction of the "Cabbage Patch," and the result was a remarkable replica of the dingy shanty settlement where the breezy philosopher of the Louisville slums moved amid a circle of characters as quaint as the place where they made their abode. A miniature village was erected for "Mrs. Wiggs." A railroad spur track was built; an engine was moved to it, and, down to the last detail, an effect was made to reconstruct the Louisville slum with the best carpenter skill available.

Lead a Real Speed Demon

Arthur Ashley, new leading man at the Thanhouser New Rochelle studio, has a record as a racing driver that serves him in good stead. In "The Speed King," the first release in which he will be seen wearing the Thanhouser colors, Mr. Ashley gives a demonstration of what it means to be a speed demon. Many of the scenes in this picture were taken at Brighton race track which will be immediately recognized by thousands who see it. Early in his career, Mr. Ashley developed an "unafraid" bump. For years he sent audiences home chilled with thrills by his daredevil bicycle exploits. He has renewed acquaintance with his old daredevil self in "The Speed King." Muriel Ostriche, "youngest of leading women" plays opposite Mr. Ashley.

"The Garden of Lies"

The forthcoming release of the All Star Feature Corporation which will be the January 4 unit of the Alco Film Corporation, on the regular program, will mark the first, and perhaps the only, appearance of the beautiful and versatile dramatic actress Miss Jane Cowl, in the intensely interesting story "The Garden of Lies" which is now in course of construction in southern Louisiana.

Miss Cowl, a graduate from the Belasco school, made her first big impression on Metropolitan critics in David Belasco's production of "Is Matrimony a Failure" at the Republic theater. Struck by her beauty and charm of acting Charles Klein, Henry Arthur Jones, Archie Selwyn and John Cort, the four directors of the Authors' Producing Company selected her to play the leading role in their first joint production, "The Gamblers," which ran for seven months at Maxine Elliott's theater.

London Theater Uses Tube Lighting

Effective Front Display

THE use of tube lights for outlining the facade of buildings is exemplified by the first and very conspicuous installation of Moore tube lamps on the front of the theater known as the West End Cinema, in Coventry street, London, England, where three lines of tube on either side of the arched facade are employed to give an attractive outline of light, in connection with a neon-tube illuminated sign over the theater entrance. The columns of tube rise to a height of 48 feet, from their base just above the level of the second floor of the building. The tube is of 1.75-inch diameter, clear, thin glass, and the three tubes on either side are united at the top by a short end section. The continuous length of each side is thus about 145 feet, allowing for the eight inches of tube which joins the three tubes at the upper end, these vertical and arching tubes being four inches apart throughout their length.

Tube lighting of a motion picture theater facade.

The tubes emerge from the building from two operating boxes, one being located on either side of a lobby within the building. Here are located the electrodes and contacts. The light is operated at the high pressure of 21,000 volts alternating current, which is produced through a rotary converter and step-up transformer set located in the basement, which receives direct current from the lighting circuit at 100 volts. The tube contains nitrogen gas, under very low pressure.

In external appearance the illumination is of a delicate shade of orange light which on near examination has the effect of glowing, and gently expanding and contracting, rings of light within the tube. The intensity of light is not so high as to make it painful to look closely at the lamp, but the effect of the novel installation is to furnish a brilliant display, which makes the building appear to be encircled with an arch of flame, and throws the shadows of the structure into deep relief. The value of the light for advertising purposes is obviously great, in that it draws the attention of the passing crowd in a fascinating manner.

The neon-tube lamp which, by a series of convolutions of the glass of which it is composed, forms the sign letters West End, has a distinctly reddish tinge, contrasting with the orange tint of the lamps above.

The words are formed by three distinct tubes, each about 35 feet in length, which wind in and out of the operating box located on the gallery referred to, which is reached through French windows from the lobby within the building. The letter W is formed by one tube, the letters est by a second, and the word End by the third. About half the length of the convolutions is contained inside the operating box, hidden from public view.

Each of these tubes has an electrode and an auxiliary, wired from their ends respectively by positive and negative cables carried from a 6,000-volt transformer located within the box. Current for operation is received from the 100-volt direct-current lighting circuit, is changed to alternating current through a rotary converter, and raised in a transformer to 6,000 volts for lamp operation.

The elementary gas neon is contained in an enlarged section of the tubes, about 6 inches long and 2.5 inches in diameter. This substance is admitted into the glass pipe in very minute quantities sufficient for about 1,000 hours of service. The neon, which gradually becomes contaminated, is cleared of foreign substances by passing through a sulphur deposit and copper filings and zinc foil.

In this type of lamp the light gives the appearance of ruddy, glowing rings, which swell like smoke rings. The combination of the neon tubes with the nitrogen tubes makes an especially effective illumination for advertising purposes.

The new illuminating equipment, which was installed a few weeks ago in the nature of an experiment, is proving abundantly satisfactory. The use of the tube lamp is being considered, in London, for outlining the exterior lines of store buildings, and for interior show-room-illumination.

Mutual Girl to Hear Stories

In the coming numbers of the Mutual Girl release, made by the Reliance Motion Picture Company, a novel plan has been adopted, wherein certain prominent people tell a story to Margaret, Our Mutual Girl. In the next coming three or four releases, some of America's foremost illustrators and writers have agreed to furnish the Reliance with material for these releases, among them being William Faversham, George Barr McCutcheon and May Wilson Preston.

Instead of having a story or scenario, the Reliance Company has been making arrangements with America's foremost authors, illustrators, society people and financiers to tell Margaret a story which they consider one of the most interesting episodes of their lives. The story does not necessarily have to apply to the person who tells it, but can be on any general subject.

The reel will open with Margaret meeting the individual in question, and will then fade into the story told, which will be enacted by a large stock company, especially engaged to fill the bill.

The first of this series is when Margaret meets William Faversham, one of America's foremost actors, and he tells her the story of "The Hawk," which is the name of the play he is now appearing in. George Barr McCutcheon has also met Miss Phillips, and has told her of a new plot which he intends working into a story. This plot deals with the Franco-Prussian period and has a soldier of fortune in it. May Wilson Preston has consented to tell a story to Miss Phillips, and at present the company is engaged in taking a more than interesting picture entitled "A Day with My Work," by May Wilson Preston.

A Lubin Western "Type"

In the short space of his career in the theater of silence, Edgar Jones has made his impress. For three years Lubin photoplays have introduced and familiarized him, to the screen public, first as leading man in western dramas, then in plays of every description as joint player and producer. Mr. Jones was playing in a New York theater when he was requested to meet Mr. Lubin at his club after the performance. Later he was introduced by Mr. Lubin to his aides as the man for whom he had been searching for two years, this being on account of the resemblance borne by Mr. Jones to the principal figure in a Frederic Remington painting owned by Mr. Lubin. Edgar Jones gives to the voiceless drama that buoyant breeziness usually associated with westerners only. Certain it is that this quality, as well as his stalwart, muscular frame, forceful countenance and intrepid horsemanship have added verisimilitude to every picture in which his talents have been displayed.

Women as Camera Men

The statement has been widely circulated that genuine war pictures are impossible to get, that mobilization maneuvers and libraries furnish practically all of the war news in films. That this is contrary to the truth is proven every week in the Pathe projection room in Jersey City when the newly arrived negatives are shown. Some of the battlefield views are so horrible that it is impossible to make use of them. Piles of unburied dead ready to be cremated, long burial trenches filled with the mangled remains of what once were men, and tangled heaps of the human flotsam and jetsam of the conflict are all shown. Such realism is, of course, unadapted for public showing.

War pictures are, it is true, very difficult to get, but not so much so as in the early days of the war. It is interesting to note that owing to the absence of most able-bodied Frenchmen on the firing line Pathe has been driven to the necessity of using women as cameramen. The sight of these Pathe "camerawomen," trudging along with camera and helper, has become a fairly common sight in Paris. It is reported that they have proven themselves quick to learn, reliable and competent and certainly those who accompany the army for the Pathe News have shown plenty of nerve as well. In several instances they have been able to get to places where cameramen were not allowed, which goes to show that human nature is the same everywhere, and that a pretty feminine face and pleasant smile have a wonderful potency in overcoming difficulties.

Using Expensive Interiors

With characteristic lavishness, George Kleine has arranged for unique and expensive interiors in his coming production "Stop Thief," founded on the Cohan & Harris comedy of that name. The library set boasts 2,000 real books, instead of the usual "prop" backs only. There is also a fine Italian renaissance mantel in carved walnut valued at $800. Beautiful Flemish tapestries for door hangings and many oil paintings add a touch of realism to the various scenes as original as it is refreshing.

The big comedy is being rapidly completed. Mary Ryan, as well as Harry Mestayer, both of whom are playing the respective leads, are enjoying the novelty of picture work, and delighted to find that they can readily exchange a successful "stage presence" for the all-essential "picture personality."

"The Last Chapter"

Carlyle Blackwell is at present working on "The Last Chapter,"—the next picture to be released by the Favorite Players. This is the story of the love affairs of an African explorer, whose sufferings and privations, for the sake of his "lady fair," are excellently portrayed. Some of the scenes are laid in darkest Africa, and the strong contrast between the wilds of Central Congo where some incidents are portrayed, and the civilized surroundings, in which the explorer finds himself on his return, form the background for a dramatic story of heart interest.

Brevities of the Business

James W. Castle, the new Edison director, brings with him all the wealth of successful experience gathered in his rise from call boy many years ago to the position of owner of well known stage productions. Mr. Castle will devote practically his entire time to directing Edison comedies—and that fact is sufficient to warrant comedies of a high order of real funniness. That is not, however, Mr. Castle's first appearance in directing motion pictures, as he spent some time as director for the Vitagraph. In his own productions, in partnership with Mr. George D. Baker, he directed such well known successes as "Graustark," Harold McGrath's "Goose Girl," and "The Bishop's Carriage," the rights of which he bought from Liebler. For two years Mr. Castle had a valuable and successful experience as director of the famous Bush Temple Stock Company of Chicago, which has turned out so many stars. He also directed the F. F. Proctor Stock Company and held the same position with "Quo Vadis" and with "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," having under him in one company such an aggregation of stars as Marie Cahill, Raymond Hitchcock, William T. Carleton, Adele Ritchie, and other luminaries. Mr. Castle is very fond of picture making, and says that he expects his association with the Edison company to be particularly pleasant, as he has, at one time or another, had nearly every leading actor and actress now with Edison under him in his long career of director. With a man of such attainments giving his entire time to Edison comedies, too much can hardly be expected in real laugh-making reels.

He's the tall, gray man of the film industry. He has a fondness for very light gray suits in the spring-time and very dark gray ones in the fall. Right now, he wears gray-topped shoes and his favorite tie of the month is a gray one, diagonally dashed with red. His eyes are gray though his hair promises never to be, as it is decidedly blond. His name is—John W. Grey. The gray Grey man's haunt is the office of the advertising manager of the Mutual Film Corporation. He conducts business along pleasant lines and never misses an opportunity to laugh or to make his caller laugh. Greater New York was the birth-place of John Grey. He attended public schools, then a college in Philadelphia and then Columbia University. For eight years after he left college he specialized in automobile advertising. R. H. Cochrane, after a satisfying acquaintance with Mr. Grey introduced him into the Universal and until four months ago Mr. Grey's card read "Advertising Manager.—Universal Film Manufacturing Company." As the man who is known as "the first to apply merchandising to motion pictures," he declares his aim not to be "to elevate the industry," but merely to merchandize what it has to offer. On the Universal's "Trey O' Hearts," and "Lucile Love" series, he issued gratuitously advertising booklets to all theaters that used this service. On the "Runaway June" series which is calling particular attention to the Mutual output right now, he is issuing a fifteen-weeks advertising campaign to any theater in the United States which is using this service. He is twenty-nine years old, is married and lives in New Rochelle, N. Y., at Pepperday Inn, in which he is financially interested. He is a member of the Wykgyl Country Club at New Rochelle, of the Republican Club, New York and the Screen Club. His hobby is golf and his chief attribute, good-nature.

George Kleine's rapidly growing business has made it necessary to open a Philadelphia office. Mr. John J. Rotchford has been appointed branch manager in that city with offices at 1309 Vine St.

Ford Sterling, known the world over as one of the foremost eccentric comedians, is ill in Los Angeles with typhoid-pneumonia. The latter part of last week his life was despaired of, but he passed through the crisis safely and is now on the road to recovery.

Mr. Thomas H. Ince, managing director of the Kay Bee, Broncho and Domino studios, wishes to announce to screen playwrights that he is not buying any outside scenarios at the present time, as his needs are supplied for by his salaried forces.

John E. Brennan, the former Kalem comedian, has joined the Sterling brand of Universal films.

William Garwood, under the direction of Lucius Henderson and supported by Violet Mersereau, is working on his first Universal picture, "On Dangerous Ground."

Syndicate Film—The rumor of a 25% extra dividend, payable in December—suggested in this column last week—has been reduced to a certainty and the cash will be distributed on December 10. We now risk another suggestion that a dividend of like amount will probably be paid prior to January 15, if not prior to the first of January.

New York Motion Picture—This stock has been very much in demand the last week. While sales were made at 66 on Wednesday, stock is now wanted at 69.

Mutual Film common has moved up to another high level from bid of 68 last week to 72.

American Film continues to jump without any stock appearing on the market.

Thanhouser Syndicate common has jumped 9 points within the last three or four days.

The page advertisement in the Chicago Tribune and other papers stating that a prize of $10,000 will be offered for the best suggestion for a new photo-play to be used in connection with the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation, offers very promising potentialities in the latter company's stock. This prize arrangement also now brings in the American Film Company as one of the contributing factors.

World Film is being traded in at the rate of from 1500 to over 2,000 shares per day. The list of stockholders has increased to very large proportions and there is a broad, active market in many cities for this security.

The Belgian War Pictures indicate the public in general have a very keen appetite for war when viewed under the safe circumstances of being remote several thousand miles from the scene of action, with only the noise of a piano substituted for the discharge of heavy artillery. The receipts from all portions of the country to date would indicate that the Belgian Red Cross Society will receive a very nice Christmas present.

Charles E. Van Loan is in Banning, Calif., with the Bosworth Company, assisting in the production of the film version of his story, "The Message to Buckshot John."

Harry Pollard, directing the production of a feature company at the American studios, and Edward Langley, assistant director, had an exciting trip to Surf, Calif., recently, where they pulled off an explosion and burning of the wrecked schooner Scotia for their production, "The Quest." The party traveled by auto, with a load of dynamite and other props, but got safely over the mountains and to their destination.

William A. Williams, of the Excelsior Feature Film Company, in the next release of that company, through the Alliance program, entitled "In the Shadow," is thrown over a fifty-foot cliff into the swift and turbulent waters of the river below.

Dorothy Gish, the clever star of the Mutual Film Corporation, was run down by an automobile last week and is in one of the Los Angeles hospitals at the present time. Her left side was badly torn and her foot injured. It is expected that it will be at least a month before she is able to leave the hospital.

A new play has been written by Charles L. Gaskill for the Vitagraph Company, to be produced under his direction, that, in addition to calling for a display in full of the rare dramatic art of Miss Helen Gardner and demanding sets of exceptional originality, will contain a feature that has proved a big factor in the success of numerous big Broadway productions—style.

Al. E. Christie, of the West Coast Universal, is producing "When His Lordship Proposed," with Johnny Dillon, Billie Rhodes, Penny Ferol and Lee Moran.

Ill fortune appears to be following the "Hazards of Helen" company at the Kalem California studio. First Helen Holmes, the heroine, was taken ill and for a time was threataened with double pneumonia. Just after she was declared out of danger J. P. McGowan, the director, fell from a telegraph pole and was painfully injured. It is thought it will be at least three months before he is able to return to work.

R. S. Doman, recently with Philip Mindil, and before that on the staff of the Mutual Film Corporation's house organs, has joined Paul Gulick in the Universal press department, succeeding Harvey Gates as associate editor of the Universal Weekly.

George Seigmann occupied the toastmaster's chair at the regular weekly good fellowship dinner of the Photoplayers' Club last week.

In order to portray the genuine conditions in a steel foundry, Murdock MacQuarrie, the Nestor-star-director, and his company of players recently enlisted the services (through the kindness of a western plant owner) of 300 employees in one of the largest foundries in the West.

Henry Otto, the "Flying A" director, has made a fine photoplay out of "The Mysterious Hut," in which he used the well known "tin-can shack" in the Santa Barbara mountains.

Rosemary Theby, Harry Myers, her co-star and director, and Brinsley Shaw, of Universal, are seen to splendid advantage in "The Accusation," several exteriors of which were taken on the magnificent Morisini estate in Yonkers, N. Y.

Marguerite Clayton's wish that she be allowed to drive a four-horse stage coach came to a realization in the Essanay play, "Broncho Billy and the Claim Jumpers."

Frank Montgomery and Mona Darkfeather have severed their connections with the feature company they were with and are considering other arrangements, but nothing has been settled as yet.

Constance Brinsley, of the eastern scenario staff of the Universal, has recovered from her illness and is now back at work on her new story, "Charity."

"The Legend Beautiful," a gorgeous two-reel "Flying A" production recently staged by Thomas Ricketts' company, is similar to "The Trail of the Lost Chord," produced under Mr. Ricketts' direction some time ago. It is founded upon "The Legend Beautiful," by Longfellow.

Edna Maison, of the Universal, Hollywood, Calif., studio, is appearing with Sidney Ayres in "The Unmasking," which Ayres is producing.

Charles Ray had a day off last week and instead of motoring from Inceville to Santa Monica, Calif., as usual, he gave his machine the needed exercise by running around to visit some of his friends at the different studios in Hollywood, where he received a warm welcome and watched some of the companies at work.

Arline Pretty, who at present is supporting King Baggot in "A Five Pound Note," was recently bridesmaid for one of her nearest friends, a moving picture actress well known in filmdom.

Thomas Ricketts' "Flying A" company finished "An Unseen Vengeance," and are working on "The Black Ghost Bandit," a typical western story with a hold-up. It is the kind which never lose their interest, and has a new situation upon which to turn.

William Russel returned last week from St. Augustine, Fla., where has been working in some scenes for the All-Star production, "The Garden of Lies," in which Jane Cowl is playing the lead.

Charles Pathe is in receipt of news from the home office in Paris stating that Paul Capellani, one of the leading men in the French studio, has been killed in an engagement in the present European struggle. This is the second leading man that the Pathe company has lost recently, Rene Alexander being the other. Both of these men were stars of the Comedie-Francaise and had a large following, both among the stage and photo-play enhtusiasts. The latest Pathe features in which Paul Capellani has been seen in this country are "The Siren," a six-reel picture released a few months ago, and "The Silent Accuser," a four-part drama released this week.

Bennie Zeidman, once of "Lubinville" and "Libertyville," who daily fingers an editor's pencil, thereby shaping artistic advertisements, sends us his views on a few current film subjects which show that he is not altogether an office man and that few things in the picture business escape his notice. His opinion on the admission price question is "O. K." and we would like to print it but space forbids.

Charles F. Stark, manager of the industrial department of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, reports the arrival in Chicago of Charles F. Stark, Jr., on Saturday, December 5. MOTOGRAPHY joins with a host of others in wishing Charles Jr., a welcome to our midst and the best of everything in life and at the same time extends congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Stark.

The gowns worn in "Young Mrs. Winthrop" by the Edison star, Miss Mabel Trunnelle, have been attracting considerable attention from the fashion writers who have seen the first showing of this film, to be released January 10. Miss Trunnelle's marked ability "to wear her clothes well" and the taste she displays in their design have brought requests for her to write magazine articles on this all-important feminine subject.

Ruth Roland, well-known as the "Kalem Girl," has signed a three-year contract with the Balboa Amusement Producing Company of Long Beach, California, and will be the star of one of the corporation's dramatic companies.

J. Parker Read, Jr. pleasingly acknowledges his submission to the little eight-pound stranger who has taken up her residence with the Reads and who seems to like the name Lillian, which has been bestowed upon her. The popularity of Mr. Reed's "Victory" film is as nothing to the victory which Miss Lillian can claim over her parents and their many friends, whose congratulations go to the Reads.

Director Scott Sidney of the Ince forces found cause for much rejoicing when Thomas H. Ince placed him in charge of the production of "The Flower of the Desert," and this is the reason why: The action of the story takes place in the heart of New York's underworld. Mr. Sidney years ago was a reporter on one of the big metropolitan dailies and in that capacity had occasion to make an exhaustive study of conditions in the slums.

Lawrence McGill, one of the foremost producers of screen plays has been appointed director of the Humanology Film Producing Company, which has only just been organized, with a capitalization of $250,000 and a directorate comprised of foremost Boston business men. The output of the new organization will be released by the United Film Service (Warner's Features, Inc.)

The Vitagraph Company of America, with the liberality characteristic of the three heads of the Company, William T. Rock, Albert E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton, has arranged to donate to the New York American Christmas Fund the entire receipts of a monster benefit at their Broadway photo-play house, the Vitagraph Theater, Wednesday, December 9.

Irene Hunt, the attractive Reliance-Mutual star, is taking a brief rest from her role as lady reporter on a big metropolitan daily, and is being featured in one of Arthur Mackley's western thrillers, "The Navajo Maiden."

Miss Bessie Locke, corresponding secretary of the National Kindergarten Association, accompanied by twenty heads of departments, were invited guests at the Edison studio last week to pass judgment upon the new picture "Uncle Crusty," soon to be released. "Uncle Crusty," in pleasing story form, was produced with the collaboration of the Kindegarten association to acquaint a greater public with the many benefits of the Kindergarten and it influence.

Director Richard Stanton of the Ince companies was surprised to learn during the production of "A Political Feud," a forthcoming Ince release, what a large amount of natural talent abounds in youngsters in and about Santa Monica, Cal., where the Inceville studios are located.

News of the first "Zudora" baby has reached the offices of the Thanhouser Film Corporation at New Rochelle. Mrs. Grover Blauster of Baltimore, Ohio, a sister to the late Charles J. Hite, has a new smiling face in her home and she has given the baby the name of Zudora.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox is contemplating the erection of a motion picture studio on her beautiful estate at Short Beach, Granite Bay, Conn. Her idea is to make it an adjunct to the plant of the Humanology Film Producing Company at Medford, Mass., which has the exclusive right to produce her famous poems in motion pictures, for release by the United Film Service.

In the coming numbers of the Mutual Girl release, made by the Reliance Motion Picture Company, a novel plan has been adopted, wherein certain prominent people tell a story to Margaret, "Our Mutual Girl." In the next coming three or four releases, some of America's foremost illustrators and writers have agreed to furnish the Reliance with material, among them being William Faversham, George Barr McCutcheon and May Wilson Preston.

The entire cast of Reliance's "Runaway June" grouped about Director Oscar Eagle.

The donkey, a most essential actor in the Edison subject "The Birth of Our Savior," made up his mulish mind to be natural and would not budge during a rehearsal, "Mary" on his back petted and coaxed him. A few, at a safe distance, tried to push him from the rear, but he was still of the same mind. Then some bright mind suggested smearing carrots over the donkey's nose and he ambled amiably toward the "carrot carrier" while the picture was quickly clicked off.

Thomas H. Ince rapidly is acquiring the title of "the busiest man in the movies." He devoted the entire summer to two of his biggest features, "The Two Gun Man" and "On the Night Stage," and although they are scarcely off his hands he now is superintending the production of a third masterpiece, "The Italian." "The Two Gun Man" is a seven reel western thriller that will serve to present William S. Hart in the stellar role. "On the Night Stage" is another western story, but of a different type. This will offer Robert Edeson, William S. Hart and Rhea Mitchell in a tri-star combination. "The Italian" is a tense dramatic narrative of the slums and will have George Beban as its principal.

Marguerite Clayton's eagerness to lend more excitement to a scene in "Broncho Billy and the Claim Jumpers," despite Mr. Anderson's warning to be careful, recently led to a sprained ankle.

Edwin Clarke, the popular young Edison player, who for the past four years has been associated with that studio, resigned last week because of a serious illness which will require permanent residence in California's mild climate.

A nation-wide movement which has for its object the establishment of a national gala day to be devoted to the boosting of American-made goods and to be known as "Made-in-U. S. A.-Day" has been inaugurated, with big motion picture and financial interests as sponsors. A quarter of a million dollars was voted as a fund to stimulate interest in the idea. Arthur Nelson, father of the project, has been put in general charge of arrangements.

Kate Price, with her usual big-heartedness, was the first motion picture player to respond to the Chicago Examiner's request to dress a doll for Chicago's poor children's Christmas tree. She selected a great big blue eyed, red haired doll and dressed it entirely in green with stockings and shoes to match.

Frank Borzage and Louise Glaum had an impromptu ducking recently in a cold fresh water lake in the Bear valley, California, during the production there of "The Panther," a forthcoming release of the New York Motion Picture Corporation Companies.

The Edison players who attended the Exhibitors' Ball in Boston were Gladys Hulette, Andy Clark, Viola Dana, William Wadsworth and Arthur Housman. All were tired from autographing thousands of photographs of themselves for many of the eight thousand guests who attended.

Victor Potel, who is "Slippery Slim" in the Essanay's "Snakeville" comedies, brought gladness to the hearts of a few hundred prisoners at the county jail in San Francisco last Sunday when he appeared at the semi-weekly performance given there for the inmates to witness.

Picture show nights at the Acme theater in Thermopolis are changed to Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday. The Acme will be under the personal management of L. P. Smith in the future.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Pathe Daily News No. 82—December 2.—One sees in this issue of the weekly the Pan-American Mass celebrated by Cardinal Gibbons in Washington, D. C., views of the Salvation Army in New York City shipping first aid supplies to Europe, and a glimpse of Arrowhead Hot Springs, Cal. In the war section, wounded Indian troops are shown at Boulogne, France; King George attending the opening of Parliament at London, England, together with some interesting views on the Yser, Belgium, taken by the Pathe cameraman while under fire.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 81—Selig—December 7.—This issue shows the American forces from Vera Cruz disembarking at Galveston, Texas, and a glimpse of the Army-Navy football game at Philadelphia; the steamer Hanalei wrecked on Duxbury Reef, nine miles from San Francisco harbor and rescue of its passengers; also numerous interesting pictures from the European war zone.

Pathe Daily News No. 83—Pathe—December 7.—This issue shows the laying of the largest submarine telephone cable in the world under the Delaware River between Philadelphia and Camden, the occupation of Vera Cruz, Mexico, by General Carranza, and in the war section troops of the various nations are shown near Dens, France, Ypres, Belgium; Verdun, France; Tamluk, India; Dixmude, Belgium and Constantinople, Turkey.

The Sheriff of Willow Gulch—Biograph—December 14.—When an old prospector and his daughter are evicted, the sheriff of Willow Gulch offers the pair shelter in his home. The girl's former sweetheart returns from a trip to claim her, but in the meanwhile she has accepted the sheriff's proposal out of gratitude. His disappointed rival is nominated by a political faction to oppose Rufus Warren, the sheriff, for re-election to that office. Warren, searching through an old pile of papers for his mother's wedding ring, which he wishes his fiancee to have, finds a sealed envelope bearing this inscription, "To be opened when you think of marrying." On opening the envelope he finds the following message, "Your father died in the insane asylum. The taint is in your blood. You may escape, but put from you all thought of marrying." Realizing that he can never claim the girl as his bride, the sheriff leaves town, after fastening a card bearing this inscription to the door of his office: "I resign as sheriff, vote for my opponent."

The Flirt—Edison—December 14.—An amusing story of a dapper young flirt who becomes entangled in the meshes of his own web. Mr. Austin is a lady killer of the worst type. He charms and discards Grace, Gracie, Grace More, and Grace Full in rapid succession, but meets his Waterloo when he sparks up to Dis Grace. The latter Grace is a pippin until she turns around and Austin, getting a good view of her, sees a coal-black face. He takes to his heels to escape the pursuing mob, which has grown larger with each flirtation, and fools them all, with one exception, the policeman. As the exultant Austin emerges from his hiding place he is "collared" and led off to jail. C. R. C.

Madame Double X—Essanay—December 14.—A broad burlesque upon the famous drama, "Madame X," in which Wallace Beery is featured in another feminine role almost as strenuous as that of "Sweedie," which he has so long been interpreting. The story depends for its punch upon the courtroom scene, which is burlesque of the broadest sort, and, as in the play which it ridicules, Madame Double X is accused of murder and is defended by her father-in-law, though their relationship is unknown to each other. N. G. C.

The Smugglers of Lone Isle—Kalem—(Two Reels) — December 14. — Jim Crompton, head of a band of smugglers on Lone Isle, rescues Jeannette when she is washed up on the beach and amazed by the girl's beauty, attempts to keep her prisoner on the island. Mad with jealousy Nellie, Jim's wife, steals into Jeanette's room to kill her rival, but her nerve fails and instead she sends her brother, Steve, to betray Jim to the secret service officers. George Luther, a revenue officer, arrives with his men in a violent storm and attacks the smugglers' stronghold. A stroke of lightning kills Jim and the resulting fire reveals to Luther that Jeanette is his missing wife. Marin Sais featured.

A Perilous Passage (14th of the "Beloved Adventurer" Series)—Lubin—December 14.—Lord and Lady Cecil return to their castle in Croftleigh and are there visited by Captain Robert Stanley, Lord Cecil's nephew. Robert is in deep trouble having been despatched by the King of Gokeral, an Indian principality, with a jewel known as "the star of Gokeral," which had to be delivered to the king of England as a token of fealty Robert explains that the jewel has been stolen from him and Betty discovers that Countess Lurovitch, an adventuress who lives on an adjoining estate, has secured it. She discovers the countess and her gang on a yacht in a little hidden cove, shut in by vertical cliffs, and Betty mounts Pinto, her cow-pony, and by means of her lasso performs a feat of novel and startling daring, by means of which she secures the jewel. When the countess and her band attack Betty, the latter is saved by the peasants of Croftleigh, who defend her, while the countess and her band are sent to their death by the collapse of the cliff, which had been undermined by the sea. Arthur V. Johnson and Lottie Briscoe featured.

The Greater Love—Vitagraph—December 14.—John Brown and Hope Avery are engaged and when John is offered a fine position in South America, he leaves with the promise to return within a year and make Hope his wife. Philip Lane is injured in an automobile accident and is taken to the Avery home, where Hope nurses him back to health. As a result, Lane proposes and when Hope tells him of her absent fiance he decides to leave at once. Meanwhile John prospers in South America and his room-mate, whose name happens also to be John Brown, is threatened with consumption. John at the end of a year joyfully starts for home and to surprise Hope disguises himself as an old sailor. He arrives in time to see Lane saying farewell to Hope and hears him ask her, "If the man you are bound to were dead, could you love me?" and she answers, "yes." John staggers at the blow and after a terrible mental struggle returns to South America without seeing her. There he finds his room-mate dead and cutting out the newspaper notices sends them to Hope. Later he receives a newspaper from America announcing Hope's marriage to Lane. Dorothy Kelly and James Morrison featured.

A Scrap of Paper—Biograph—(Two Reels)—December 15.—Madame de Merival's two daughters, Louise and Mathilde, are loved by Prosper and Anatole, though their mother objects to their sweethearts. The girls use the base of a statuette as a post office, but after Louise has written a note to Prosper the girls are hurried away to Paris. The house is closed and Prosper never gets the note. Thinking her sweetheart has forgotten her, Louise marries a baron and later on returning home she rebukes Prosper for neglecting her. Prosper obtains the note from the statuette and refuses to give it back to Louise until Anatole and Mathilde are married. He hides the note in his uncle's tobacco jar and Louise and Suzanne, her cousin, are dared to find and destroy it. On visiting Prosper's home to seek the note, Louise is surprised by her husband, the baron, but she hides and Suzanne pretends it is she who is in love with Prosper. After the baron has gone Suzanne finds the note and substitutes a blank sheet of paper for it and places the letter itself near the hearth. Later Prosper, about to light a lamp, uses the letter he finds near the hearth, but extinguishes the flame before the entire message has been consumed. He tosses the paper out of the window, and when Suzanne explains that he has burned the note, they both realize it may fall into the hands of others on the lawn without, and hasten outside to find it. Prosper's uncle, passing, finds the paper and uses it to wrap up a rare butterfly that he has captured. Meanwhile Anatole has decided to communicate with Mathilde and discovers the paper in which the butterfly is wrapped and uses it to write her a note. The note falls into the hands of Madame de Merival and the scrap of paper is now in the hands of the one it ought never to have reached. Suzanne cleverly extricates the note from her aunt's hands and eventually burns it.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

The Vanishing of Olive—EDISON—DECEMBER 15.—This is the fourth release of the "Olive's Opportunities" series, and is a little drama in itself, independent of the preceding and following chapters. At one of Madame Forresti's receptions Olive hears an unkind remark made about herself and later openly resents it. For this she is roundly scolded by her self-appointed guardian. That night Drew Martin determines to get rid of Olive, who is one of the stumbling blocks in the path to the Coleman fortune, and has her abducted and imprisoned in an opium den in the Chinese section of the city. Vance Coleman, searching for her, sees the monkey on the fire escape, organizes a rescue party, and raids the place. Thinking to do away with Olive, the Chinaman plunges his dirk through the curtain of her bunk, but it is his little daughter's body that rolls out at his feet. Olive rushes upstairs into Vance's arms. C. R. C.

The Loose Change of Chance—ESSANAY—DECEMBER 15.—A splendidly produced Essanay detective story dealing with an enormous diamond which has been smuggled by a thief of note. Ned Hallman is amazed while dining at a restaurant to find a diamond in his glass of water, it having accidentally reached there by being poured out from the carafe, in which it had been concealed by Franz, the waiter. Ned is arrested as the thief and taken before Count Le Febre, who claims to have lost the diamond. He assists the police by exposing the count as the diamond smuggler and then returns to the restaurant, where he captures Franz, the waiter. The reward obtained for the capture of the thief enables him to marry Eloise, his sweetheart. Richard C. Travers and Beverly Bayne featured. N. G. C.

Cupid Backs the Winner—KALEM—DECEMBER 15.—When Dorothy and her little sister, Fay, move into the house next to that occupied by Jack and his little brother, Steve, Cupid giggles and prepares for target practice. Fay quickly gets on speaking terms with Steve, and Dorothy, learning that Jack is a physician, pretends to be ill, thus arranging to meet him. After reading a book entitled, "The Habits of Primitive Man," Steve decides to attempt the same sort of a wooing and Fay is unable to resist him. Jack and Dorothy seeing the success of the children's love-making follow in their footsteps, while Cupid is delighted with the results of his work. Ruth Roland and Marshall Neilen featured.

It Cured Hubby—LUBIN—DECEMBER 15.—Norma, to cure Ferdie, her husband, of drinking, arranges with the minister to effect a cure. They procure two bottles labeled "whiskey" and fill them with sarsaparilla, planning to appear to be drunk themselves when Ferdie returns, believing that the shock will make him take the pledge. The bottles are left in the kitchen and when the cook in a struggle with her policeman friend who is trying to kiss her, accidentally breaks the bottles, the cop replaces the sarsaparilla with two real bottles of whiskey. Ferdie appearing, Norma and the minister begin drinking. Ferdie is amazed as he beholds his wife and the minister tangoing, and to make matters worse, the members of the Temperance Union drop in at that moment. Eventually Norma discovers the substitution of the whiskey for the sarsaparilla and explanations follow all around, while hubby takes the pledge. Eva Bell featured.

Weary Willie's Rags—LUBIN—DECEMBER 15.—Harry Paff, a well-to-do business man, is robbed of his clothes in a city hotel by William Ragson, who sneaks into Paff's room. Paff, next morning, is compelled to don the tramp's filthy rags and his appearance is so changed that he is kicked out of the hotel while Ragson, dressed in his clothes, lives on the fat of the land. Poor Paff appropriates a lunch basket he finds on a bench in the park and is pinched. At the station he meets Ragson, who has also been arrested, and eventually regains his own identity.

The Man from the East—SELIG—DECEMBER 15.—Starting in the East, the plot of this story follows the hero West and then brings the heroine to the frontier for the reconciliation. This has been done many times, but it is a Tom Mix production in this case and the plot is completely forgotten in the exciting incidents which are injected into it. The cowboy-leading man has the principal role, with Goldie Colwell and Leo Maloney in the supporting parts. Tom Bates, a young millionaire who was a cowboy before inheriting his fortune, is engaged to May. In a fit of foolish jealousy she breaks the engagement and he returns to the West. He proves his worth and is hired as cowboy. May visits an aunt in the same part of the country and when Tom rescues her from a stage coach runaway, which, by the way, is a thriller, she tells him she is sorry for her rash act and they again become engaged. C. J. C.

Out of the Past—VITAGRAPH—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 15.—Rose, Cyril Benton's Italian-American wife, is happy with a good husband, a little child and a home. One night during Benton's absence, Rose is frightened by two midnight intruders, one of whom reveals himself as Giorgio, a former rejected lover. He threatens, in the event of her failure to turn over the contents of her husband's safe, to tell Benton how years ago his wife had killed her first husband. The cornered woman explains that her crime was committed in self-defense and tells Giorgio of her coming to America, finding friends in Benton and his mother, and of her marriage. She implores him to leave her and at that moment the other intruder appears and she recognizes in him Luigi, her father, whom she had thought dead. Luigi defends her, at which Giorgio objects and the two engage in a duel with stilettos. Giorgio is killed and Benton, returning unexpectedly is met by Rose who cries, "I managed to kill one, but the other overpowered me." Luigi without a word accepts the situation and is arrested as a common burglar. Later he dies in the hospital, where Rose goes to bless him for keeping silence and thus preserving her home and her husband's love. Eulalie Jensen featured.

On Christmas Eve—EDISON—DECEMBER 16.—This picture holds by its strong human appeal. The plot is not deep, but in its delineation one is made to feel that generosity and forbearance are capable of overcoming obstacles against which stubborn opposition could make no headway. To preserve peace in his son's household, old William Morris decides to leave and shift for himself. His quick-tempered, extravagant daughter-in-law even refuses to bid him goodby. While acting as a volunteer Santa Claus on the street the old man is approached by his grandchildren, who tell him that their father said he was not going to visit them this Christmas. Filled with love and forgiveness, the elder Morris visits his son's home on Christmas eve with a present for each member of the little family. In the presence of such genuine charity, selfishness cannot live long, and the old man and his son's family quickly become reconciled. C. R. C.

Two Pop-Up Fables—Essanay—December 16.—Two of the inimitable George Ade fables, one entitled the fable of "The Girl Who Shifted the System," which deals with the girl's discovery that the way to win a man's affections is to flatter him and the moral of which is given as "If he likes syrup, feed it to him by the gallon": the other, entitled "The Fable of the Sarcastic Husband and the Lady Shopper," which concerns a certain wife who shopped all day and returned home with a small spool of thread. When her husband made sarcastic remarks, she shopped again and brought home nine drayloads of goods. The moral of this is "Never arouse a sleepy shopper." N. G. C.

The Hate That Withers—Kalem—Two Reels)—December 16.—Spurned by Iola Neville, George Judson plots to ruin her happiness and that of Jack Worthington whom she marries. He is aided by Celeste Valdane, an adventuress, who ensnares Jack after he has discovered his wife's shallowness. Iola, piqued by Jack's apparent love for Celeste, flirts with Malden. Sure that she has lost Jack's love, she develops a genuine affection for him and when their child is born Jack shrinks from the twisted, lifeless form in horror. Misery humbles Iola's pride and she appeals to Celeste whose heart has been softened, and the adventuress tells Iola that she is to wed Judson. Returning home, Iola determines to end her existence and Jack, having visited and been repulsed by Celeste, also returns home and arrives just in time to prevent his wife's suicide. The two then realize that both have sinned and resolve to start life anew. Alice Hollister and Harry Millarde featured.

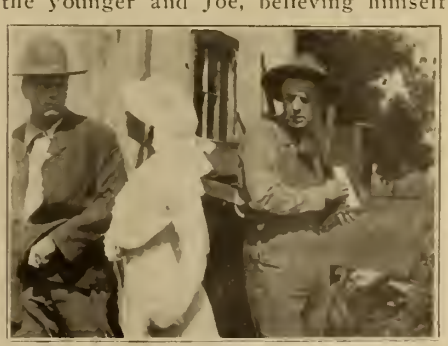
The Bomb—Lubin—(Two Reels)—December 16.—Duke Boris is sent by the czar to inform Count Ivan of the confiscation of his property and his banishment from Russia. Boris meets Sonia and recognizes in her a beautiful woman in whom he has much interest. The shock of his banishment kills Count

Ivan, and Sonia flames in anger at Boris and swears to be revenged against the government and Boris as its agent. She joins a society of anarchists and Duke Boris, seeking her, joins the society himself under the name of Kamoroff. Under this name he saves her from insult at the hands of Michael, one of the anarchists, and succeeds in winning her love. The anarchists plan to blow up Duke Boris and one day Michael discovers that the duke has been present at their meetings, he being Kamoroff. Sonia is selected to place the bomb in Boris' room and goes there for that purpose. Boris surprises the girl and the two recognize each other and Sonia, forgetting her revenge, throws herself into Boris' arms. The anarchists, seeking revenge, follow Boris to his apartments and arrive as the bomb is about to explode. Picking it up Boris hurls it at them and it explodes, though Boris and Sonia survive and rejoice in each other's love. William Cohill and Lilie Leslie featured.

The Test—Selig—December 16.—Tom Santschi and Bessie Eyton are pleasing in this story of sea life. The fire scenes aboard the boat are well presented and the marine atmosphere is preserved throughout. Captain Duggen has but two things in life—his boat and his daughter Jo. The girl is in love with Jim Lucas, the mate. On one of their trips Horace Burke, a wealthy man's son, is a passenger, and he steals Jo's heart from Jim. Captain Duggan dies of heart failure while they are at sea, and at the same time a fire breaks out aboard the ship. Burke proves a coward but all get away safely. Jo leaps from the lifeboat to return to her father's body, and Jim follows. They reach the ship and give the body a hasty burial in the sea. They then cling to driftwood until morning, when they are rescued. Jo has learned which of the men deserve her love and clings to Jim. Little touches of heart interest add to the worth of the production. James Oliver Curwood wrote the scenario. C. J. C.

The Egyptian Mummy—Vitagraph—December 16.—Dick is objected to as a prospective son-in-law by Professor Hicks, a scientist seeking the recipe for the elixir of life. Hicks' objection to Dick is on account of his poverty. When Hicks eventually invents what he believes an elixir of life, he advertises in the paper for a mummy to try it on. Dick seeing the ad, hires Tim, a tramp, to pose as a mummy. Tim is wrapped up in bandages and placed in a coffin. Dick then sends word to Professor Hicks that he has a mummy for sale at $5,000 and Hicks, after inspecting the mummy, buys it. Dick invests his money in stock recommended by a friend and Hicks fills up a big syringe with the elixir of life and jabs it into Tim. The tramp-mummy comes to life and chases Professor Hicks out of the room. The professor locks the door and goes off to tell his daughter and the rest of the household of his wonderful success. Tim escapes from the room and meets Dick, who has won a fortune on the stock market. Dick, now wealthy, goes to the professor and claims his bride. Lee Beggs and Billy Quirk featured.

Red Dye—Biograph—December 17.—George goes to call on his girl. Above her is an apartment occupied by crooks and above them an actress' chamber. The actress has used a red dye to re-color an old gown and the bottle being tipped over, some of the red dye seeps through the floor and a drop falls on the waist of the female crook. "It's blood," she cries and makes a hasty exit. The dye drips on down to the apartment below and falls on George's girl. "Blood," she screeches, and faints away. Her father summons the police and eventually the "blood" is traced back to the actress and meanwhile the crooks have been caught by other officers. On the same reel:



A Natural Mistake—Biograph—December 17.—Hubby finds a cigarette stub which his wife has been smoking and suspects the presence of a man in the house, but his wife denies this. Hubby alleges that he is going out of town on business, and wifey begins to rehearse some amateur theatricals. Hubby returns unexpectedly and finds this note on the table, "Darling, my husband goes away today. Be sure to come. Your own." In a fury of jealousy he plans revenge and peering through the window sees his wife and the man he believes her lover rehearsing a love scene. Convinced of his wife's perfidy, he throws things at the lover and eventually learns that it was a play being rehearsed.

Snakeville's Blind Pig—Essanay—December 17.—Another of the famous Snakeville stories, in which Slippery Slim and Mustang Pete "get theirs" from their respective wives. When the town goes dry, the saloonkeeper hits on a brilliant idea of serving drinks through a pipe which runs outside. After many of his customers have learned the secret of the method of obtaining a drink, the ladies discover the scheme and manage to capture the saloonkeeper, and themselves operate the bar, serving kerosene instead of whiskey. N. G. C.

When the Blind See—Lubin—(Two Reels)—December 17.—John Green, a retired farmer, has two sons, Joe, a practical business man who runs the farm, and Edwin, a quiet, easy going chap, who cares more for study than for money. Ruth, a sister of the boys, is partial to the younger and Joe, believing himself the only fit member of the family to have possession of the farm, induces his father to deed him the place. After his father's death, Joe tells Edwin there is no place for him on the farm and advises him to shift for himself. Ruth leaves with Edwin and the two go to the city, where Edwin attends a medical college, aided in a financial way by Ruth. Meanwhile Joe discovers oil on the farm and his wells make him very wealthy. His enjoyment of life is not unalloyed, however, for he finds his eyesight failing. When he consults a specialist years later he is referred to Dr. Green, an eminent surgeon of the city. Visiting his office, he is amazed to learn that Dr. Green is his brother. Edwin at first refuses to perform the operation necessary, but Ruth eventually induces him to relent and the operation is successfully performed. Joe then makes atonement for the past. L. C. Shumway, W. E. Parsons and Velma Whitman featured.

The Question of Clothes—VITAGRAPH—DECEMBER 17.—Hugh Witherly, a young curate, is courting his penniless niece, Madge, when she suddenly comes into a fortune. Madge absolutely refuses to marry him and her uncle. Colonel Ponsonby, locks her in her room. She dons a man's suit and escapes through the window. She goes to the home of her school chum, Jessie Strickland, and the girls decide to introduce Madge as a cousin of Jessie's. This works finely, though Harry, Jessie's sweetheart, becomes very jealous of the strange young man. All sorts of amusing and thrilling complications occur at Jessie's home and Madge creates such a sensation that she finally has to declare her real identity. Witherly is horrified at the thought of his future wife wearing trousers and gives up his plan of marrying her, but Tom, Jessie's brother, has fallen deeply in love with her and she with him, so when Jessie and Harry decide to be married, Tom and Madge agree to a double wedding. Norma Talmadge featured.

His Prior Claim—BIOGRAPH—DECEMBER 18. — William Dearborn, who employs Mabel Knowles, learns of an attachment between Harry Dearborn, his brother, and frivolous Molly Gray. When Harry marries Molly, against William's wishes, William refuses to have anything to do with him, "unless you leave that woman." Harry two years later again appeals to his brother for assistance and gets the same answer. That night he breaks into the office and is shot by the watchman. After the funeral Molly goes to Mabel's home to appeal to her and there dies of exhaustion, leaving her baby. Mabel and her mother adopt the child and months later Mabel takes the baby to the office one day. When William learns who she is, he insists that he has a prior claim as the child's uncle, but the baby lisps, "Can't mamma Mabel come, too?" and William realizes that he has long loved Mabel. Brought together by the child, they are married.

The Colonel of the Red Huzzars—EDISON (THREE REELS)—DECEMBER 18.—A splendidly staged story of court intrigue showing how Major Armand Dalberg of the U. S. A. visited the kingdom of Valaria, met and wooed the Princess Dehra, and finally married her, after being created a grand duke. See review on page 733, issue of November 28th.

The Girl from Thunder Mountain—ESSANAY—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 18.—A splendidly produced picture in which Richard C. Travers and Ruth Stonehouse are featured. The story deals with one Lawrence Bartlett, a surveyor, who meets an uncouth mountain girl while working in the mountains of Virginia. Returning to New York, he boasts to a society woman that all Virginia women are not educated and refined, and the society woman accepts a dare to make one of the mountain maids a society bud, fit to rank with any of New York's smartest set. True to her promise, she brings the girl to New York and eventually Bartlett falls into the net and becomes engaged to her. See review on page 801, issue of December 12.

Through the Keyhole—KALEM—DECEMBER 18. — Mrs. Fortune and her son, Algy, set their caps for Millionbucks and his daughter, Helen. Mrs. Fortune easily accomplishes her aim, but refuses to wed Millionbucks unless his daughter marries her son. Helen has fallen in love with Freddy, the son of the hotel proprietor, and Freddy hangs Algy out of the window when he interrupts. Millionbucks in the next room, peeks through the keyhole and is discovered by Freddy, who places a mirror in front of the door, thus informing him that the lovers know he was spying. Angered, he dashes into the room, rescues Algy and kicks Freddy out. When the parents leave Algy and Helen alone, Freddy makes Algy captive and, armed with an ammonia gun, wreaks vengeance on Millionbucks, when he again peeks through the keyhole Algy finds the ammonia gun and Millionbucks believes him the guilty party. Millionbucks is getting the worse of the scuffle when Helen and Freddy appear and rescue him and gratitude causes the father to consent to their marriage. John Brennan and Ethel Teare featured.

The Comedienne's Strategy—LUBIN—DECEMBER 18.—Major Kirkham is an admirer of Mlle. Rosie, a music hall artiste and proposes to her on numerous occasions. To get rid of him Rosie shows him a photograph which she declares is that of her husband. Meanwhile the major's daughter, Hazel, elopes with Fred Mayer, her sweetheart, and the couple notify the major of their marriage, sending with the letter a photograph of Fred. On opening the letter and gazing at Hazel's husband the major discovers that he is also the husband of Rosie. He summons the police and when Fred is arrested he denounces him as a bigamist. Rosie visits the police station and explains the joke. Hazel and Fred are happy and the major is cured of his desire to wed the singer. Rosemary Theby and Harry Meyers featured.

The Tale of a Coat—SELIG—DECEMBER 18.—This is a pleasing comedy without any objectionable features. A family is made wealthy over night by a legacy a rich relation leaves them and at once start to conquer society. Their etiquette is not fitted to the social class, however, and they have many comical difficulties. Their daughter returns from college and they plan to have a coming out party. Her lover arrives and when her father finds them embraced in the garden he makes a lunge for the lover, but gets only the tail of his coat. The lover exchanges his coat for that of the butler and the unfortunate servant absorbs the wrath of the father, whose only clue is the missing coat tail, while the lovers steal off and are married. The father is then told of the deception and forgives the young couple. Elsie Greeson, Sid Smith and John Lancaster have the leads.

Who's Who in Hogg's Hollow—VITAGRAPH—DECEMBER 18.—Bixford and his family startle the little town of Hogg's Hollow by speeding through it in a big automobile. Phineas Hogg, on his horse-drawn bus, orders them to stop, but they pay no attention to him. When their car breaks down, Hogg appears, displays his sheriff's badge and pinches them for speeding. Being the jailer, he locks them up in the jail and then next day takes them to court, where he assumes the office of judge. He fines them for speeding in addition to collecting bus fares for hauling them back and charging them for hauling back the auto. They put up at the Palace Hotel and learn with surprise that Hogg is the proprietor. When they ring for a bell-boy Hogg appears in a bell-hop's suit. Hunting next day, Bixford is arrested for poaching by Hogg, he being the game-warden. The ladies of the party go shopping and discover that Hogg is the postmaster, department store owner and salesman. When Bixford wires for money, Hogg acting as bank cashier, cashes his draft and then holds court and announces that after the bills and fines are paid, Bixford has $1.60 coming. An appeal to the governor results in Bixford being referred to Mr. Hogg, and the climax is reached when Flora Bixford and George, Hogg's son, decide to marry. Hogg, as usual, is in on the ceremony, he being minister. Sidney Drew featured.

The Bond Sinister—BIOGRAPH—DECEMBER 19.—Miller, a wayward society youth, falls into the hands of a band of crooks. Visiting at the home of a rich jeweler for the purpose of theft, he meets and falls in love with Helen, the jeweler's daughter. The crooks encourage his intimacy with her and urge Miller to learn the date when her father's next consignment of jewels will be shipped. The girl herself is compelled to accompany the shipment and the crooks prepare a trunk within which is concealed one of their gang and the trunk is put on the same train with the shipment of jewels. At the proper time the crook in the trunk gets out, overpowers the baggage master and transfers the contents of the trunk containing the jewels into the trunk in which he has been concealed. He dons the baggage master's coat and hat and at the next station puts his trunk off the train. His pals are on hand with an auto and just as they depart the real baggage master recovers and gives the alarm. Miller and the girl accompany the detectives who start out in pursuit and the crooks are stopped after a long chase, by telephoning the caretaker of a drawbridge futher down the line, to swing the bridge, thus holding the crooks at bay. In effecting the capture Miller is killed.

The Birth of Our Savior—EDISON—DECEMBER 19.—This is another of the many Xmas pictures made by this company. It pictures graphically the visit of the three kings with gifts for the Son of God, and the flight of Mary and Joseph before the fury of the wicked King Herod.

Broncho Billy's Christmas Spirit—ESSANAY—DECEMBER 19.—G. M. Anderson featured in a Christmas story that many exhibitors will find a regular "tear squeezer." An humble prospector, too poor to buy toys for his children, steals Broncho Billy's horse, sells it and spends the money for toys. The youngsters are naturally delighted on awaking, but next morning, when Billy and the sheriff arrive, all seems gloomy for the prospector. When Broncho Billy learns, however, that the money was spent for toys for the children, his heart is touched and he sees that each member of the posse contributes to a Christmas fund for the prospector. They then depart, leaving the family with the best Christmas of their entire lives. N. G. C.

The Black Diamond—Kalem—December 19.—Another "The Hazards of Helen" in which Helen Holmes aids Dick Malling, an aviator, when he is attacked by Dan Haddon, a cowboy. When Dick believes that he has shot Dan and attempts to escape aboard the Black Diamond Express, Dan's cowboy friends take a short cut across country in the hope of overtaking the train and capturing Dick. Helen dashes to the aeroplane and gets Dick's assistant to fly with her in pursuit of the train. They arrive in time and rescue Dick, but when, later, Dick flies over Eagle Bend, the scene of the opening of the story, the aeroplane breaks down and Dick is captured. By this time, however, Dan has recovered and it is learned that he was not shot by Dick as was supposed. Helen induces the cowboys to go to Dick's aid and Dick is saved from lynching in the nick of time. Helen Holmes featured.

Who's Who—Lubin—December 19.—Jim Luke stops at Dr. Black's office to tell him that his wife is a little dippy. The doctor promises to do what he can for her. The daily papers give an account of a negro with unbalanced mind roaming about and when the doctor by mistake visits the wrong house, the occupant having read of the negro, thinks the doctor is the crazy man. The doctor tries to humor the patient, while the patient tries to humor the doctor. Eventually the neighbors and the police arrive and the doctor learns of his mistake. On the same reel:

Shall the Curfew Ring Tonight—Lubin—December 19.—Bess, a beautiful lady barber, is loved by Willie Gumph and also by General Bovril. The general orders Willie shot at the ringing of the curfew and Bess attempts to bribe the sexton of the church, but he refuses to comply with her request. She climbs into the belfry, detaches the bell from the beam and fastens the bell rope around her waist. The old sexton arrives and pulls the bell as usual, while poor Willie is tied to a keg of powder with a fuse in front of it. When the general goes to the church to ascertain the cause of the curfew failing to ring, and his head appears through the trap in the belfry, Bess kicks him in the face and he falls to the floor below. Bess then forges a letter to the commanding officer, hastens to the spot of execution and rescues Willie.

The Lady or the Tigers—Selig—December 19.—Kathlyn Williams is featured in this subject and the intrepid leading woman does some dangerous work in handling the tigers, who appear anything but domesticated. Frank Clark and Lamar Johnstone are the other principals in the cast. It is a most enjoyable animal picture, combining dramatic acting and thrills. Annette and Gilbert, artists, are engaged. Gilbert is called to Paris by his work and Annette is employed by Barlow, a wealthy bachelor, to paint one of his tigers. While at his home he makes advances to her, but she says she is engaged. He manages to steal Gilbert's letters before they reach her and finally she yields to his entreaties and agrees to marry him. Gilbert returns and they discover the trick Barlow has played. Barlow, however, makes Gilbert a prisoner and forces him to choose between two doors, one of which leads to Annette and the other to the tigers. Gilbert chooses the latter and is cast among the animals, but Annette saves him by exerting her influence over the animals. Barlow meets the fate he deserves. C. J. C.

Mr. Santa Claus—Vitagraph—(Two Reels)—December 19.—Celeste Moissant, a young widow, lives in a boarding house on the floor below Bobby Walton. On Christmas Eve, Celeste puts Fanchon, her little daughter, to bed with tales of Santa Claus and then the mother leaves for the Pink Rat Cafe, where she sings. Meanwhile Bobby receives news that he has been left a fortune. After cashing his check, he encounters Fanchon in the hall and she asks him if he is Santa Claus. Amused at her innocent prattle, he carries her back to bed and then goes out to buy toys. He is compelled by friends to visit the Pink Rat Cafe and there saves Celeste from the undesirable attentions of a drunken man. The girl is blamed for causing the disturbance and discharged. Returning home, she finds Bobby decorating an artificial palm in her room as a Christmas treat for Fanchon's benefit. He wins a promise from the mother and the girl to take Christmas dinner with him and after he departs Celeste kneels by the bedside of Fanchon and thanks God that her troubles are over, as she feels that Bobby is going to be a real Santa Claus to her as well as Fanchon.

Mutual Program

Mutual Weekly No. 102—Mutual—December 10.—This issue shows the annual jack rabbit drive near Pasco, Washington, the automobile race at Corona, Calif., Richard Croker and his Indian bride, the annual dog show at Boston and New York, and in the battle section, a wonderful picture in which an aeroplane destroys a Zeppelin.

Percy the Milliner—Royal—December 12.—Mr. Biddle dislikes his wife's new hat and gives it to his stenographer. The next day Mrs. Biddle visits him at his office, and sees the girl wearing her hat. Mistaking her husband's reason for giving the girl the hat, Mrs. Biddle accuses him of duplicity, and leaves the office in a huff. When it comes time to pay her bill at the restaurant she discovers that she has forgotten her purse, and is forced to accept Percy the milliner's offer to pay the bill. He, thinking that Mrs. Biddle is a widow, calls the next evening. Mrs. Biddle admits him, supposing that he has come for the money, but, when he addresses her in endearing terms, and attempts to make love to her, she pushes him into a closet to prevent Biddle's hearing him. The manner in which the milliner is extricated from his self-imposed difficulties without disturbing the harmony of the Biddle family forms a punchy and laughable ending to the story.

When East Meets West—Thanhouser—December 13.—May Swan, her mother, and fiance visit Yellowstone Park. The girl takes a notion that she must see how the falls look from below, before they return East, but Jack insists that it is too dangerous, and will not allow her to try it. She derides him for being such a coward, and the next day sets out with a guide, intent on climbing down the steep precipice. She is barely started on the perilous venture before the rocks which afford her a handhold break off, and she narrowly escapes death by landing on a shelf of rock below. Here Jack's bravery becomes evident. He ties a rope about his body, has the others lower him, and rescues May. Mrs. Swan blames the young fellow for the near-tragedy, and forbids his seeing May again, but later learns the facts of the case and helps in bringing about a reunion between the lovers.

In Tune—American—(Two Reels)—December 14.—The author's home life is unhappy and he finds he cannot write successfully. When one of his employees steals some bonds and he is threatened with ruin his wife deserts him. Later she is killed and when his stenographer traces the theft he realizes that she is the woman to make his home life in tune with his mode of living. A complete review will be found on page 833 of this issue.

Our Mutual Girl—Chapter (48)—Reliance—December 14.—After a morning devoted to shopping, Margaret and Aunt Abbie call on William Faversham, and he tells them the story of his latest play, "The Hawk," now playing in New York. Margaret and her companion become intensely interested in the story of pretty Mary Falconer who is obliged to serve as a decoy for her father and Passroe, professional gamblers. John Gordon is attracted to her, learns her story, and brings about her release from her unhappy position. Falconer and Passroe escape from the police at the last moment, but the third partner, Mary, is perfectly satisfied with the present order of things, and is content in young Gordon's arms.

Her Younger Sister—BEAUTY—DECEMBER 15.—A situation is developed in this little human interest drama that is a very true one. In many homes the fiance of the older sister is attracted by the younger one and it is safe to say that in the majority of cases the older sister steps aside. The acting of Gladys Kingsbury, Charlotte Burton and Joseph Harris, who compose the trio in this picture, is very sympathetic. The settings and photography are excellent. The older sister is wooed by a young man and returns his love but her father asks them not to marry until the younger sister is old enough to care for him, as he is an invalid. The girl agrees and the man goes away to make his fortune. Years later he returns and when he meets the little sister, who is now a young woman, he falls in love with her.

The older sister sees, and when her father asks her to stay with him always she breaks her engagement, leaving the man and her younger sister free to marry. C.J.C.

At Dawn—MAJESTIC—DECEMBER 15.—Receiving an appointment as teacher in the Philippines Sykes, an American, leaves his fiancee to take up his new work. Later he receives a letter from her stating that she has fallen heiress to a large sum of money and is coming to visit him. He decides to rid himself of the native girl with whom he has been living, and poisons her. The American girl is to arrive at dawn the next day. Two young army officers happen into the vicinity and inquire their way of Sykes. His uneasiness arouses their suspicions, and they search about and find the native girl's dead body. The lieutenant orders Sykes to point out the trail, and motions his sergeant to follow him. The sergeant does, rope in hand, and returns just at dawn, alone. When the girl arrives she is told that Sykes is dead—that men die very suddenly in this tropical country.

The Silent Way—AMERICAN—DECEMBER 16.—This production is in many ways superior to the average one-reel film. Some rare sunset views are given and all the exterior scenes are artistically chosen. The work of George Field, as a silent, whole-souled Indian, who received a college education but preferred to live in the open, is a praiseworthy bit of character acting. He fits the type to perfection. Ed Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood also do fine work in the other important roles. The story is based on the fact that many people seek health in the country, overlooking the fact that it is living close to nature in the open, rather than being away from the city, that really helps them. The city girl comes to the ranch to regain her health, but continued taking her medicine and remaining indoors. When her life is despaired of the Indian kidnaps her and takes her to some of his tribe, who show her the life of the open. When she is cured she discovers the "silent way" in which the Indian saved her life, doing so only in time to save him from being hanged for kidnaping her. C.J.C.

The Panther—BRONCHO—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 16.—Rather than marry Andrew McLeod, the "factor," Julie Ledru runs away. Her father is brutally beaten by McLeod, and then shot. Julie meets Father Lazare and David Brandt, a hunter, on their way to the trading station, and appeals to them for help. Brandt promises to do anything for her, and she then asks him to marry her. After some hesitation on the part of both men this is done. McLeod's Indians capture the three, and bring them before the "factor." He instructs John Caribou, an Indian, to allow the married couple to escape, and then to kill Brandt and bring Julie back. Wishing to revenge his friend Ledru's death John pretends to comply, and entices McLeod out into the forest to show him Brandt's body. Here they engage in a hand-to-hand struggle. John is mortally wounded, but manages to shoot McLeod before he succumbs. Brandt and Julie in the meantime make their escape.

The Joke on Yellentown—RELIANCE—DECEMBER 16.—Pete and Ike, cowboys of the Bar X ranch, find a suitcase lost by a minister, and decide to play a joke on Yellentown by dressing up in the clerical robes and holding a prayer meeting. The men all attend, and, not penetrating the two cowboys' disguises, allow themselves to be disarmed before entering the hall. Ike and Pete cover the gathering with their guns, relieve them of their valuables, and, when satisfied with the success of their joke and the way they have humbled them, return the loot to the owners.

A Political Feud—DOMINO—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 17.—One day Tom Walton, a poor boy comes upon a crowd of children teasing Helen Kent, a millionaire's daughter. He defends the girl, puts her on her pony, and sees that the children do not bother her further. About ten years later Tom Walton and Dick Kent are attending the same college. Tom works nights in a freight house. Returning from work one night he is jeered at and insulted by a crowd of Dick's friends. A fight ensues and Tom is victorious. Later on in life Tom and Dick become rivals for the governorship of the state. Dick and his supporters concoct a plan to ruin Tom's reputation which is overheard by Helen, who has always remained an ardent admirer of the young fellow. Dick refuses to forego the plan, and Helen informs Tom of it, enabling him to win the election.

Trapped by a Heliograph—AMERICAN—DECEMBER 18.—Sergeant Blake and Colonel Beaugardus love Laura, the daughter of the paymaster of a company of the heliograph service, and she returns the love of the latter. Blake and a band of outlaws attempt to hold up the paymaster and despite the attempt of the colonel and his men to overcome them, they appear about to succeed. Laura, who is with her father, makes her escape in a thrilling manner, however, and hurrying to a heliograph, signals for help. Other soldiers arrive and in a running battle the outlaws are captured. The colonel and Laura then tell the paymaster of their intention of marrying.

The Game of Life—KAY BEE—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 18.—Here is a two-part sociological drama of sterling quality, portraying vividly but not repulsively the battles, mental and physical, that are necessary in order to surmount successfully the hazards encountered in the game called "life." Rhea Mitchell and George Osborne play the leading parts, and their performances in past Kay Bee pictures are an assurance that this one is a drama of unusual merit.

The Beat of the Year—RELIANCE—DECEMBER 19.—Bruce, a cub reporter, obtains his first opportunity to make a "scoop" by being sent out on a murder case. He follows a clew and discovers that the victim was known as Greening in the factory where he was employed, but that this is only an assumed name, he being the son of a multi-millionaire. Bruce soon causes the arrest of another of the factory's employees, a young fellow named Joyce who confesses to killing Greening, saying that he did it because Greening had refused to marry Helen Lister, with whom he had been keeping company. A letter written by Greening is found which proves that he had no intention of deceiving Helen, and meant to marry her. The shock kills Joyce.

Bill and Ethel at the Ball—KOMIC—DECEMBER 20.—The stenographers plan to give a ball and ask Mr. Hadley to be the guest of honor. He consents and sends Bill out for a costume for him. Hadley then makes arrangements to meet his sweetheart there, describing his costume so she will be sure to know him. In the meantime Ethel's fellow calls, and states that he has no costume. Bill gives him Mr. Hadley's and rushes out to buy another for the boss. At the ball the similarity of the two costumes causes a great deal of embarrassment at unmasking time, and Hadley solemnly vows that the stenographers' next ball will not be honored with his presence.

Sid Nee's Finish—THANHOUSER—DECEMBER 20.—Sid Nee eludes the federal officers, and makes his way to Kate's town where he opens up a laundry. Kate objects to the opposition, but her attempts to put the Chinaman out of business are of no avail. She then decides to enter into partnership with him. Mike, her sweetheart, thinks that the proposed partnership is to be a life one, and enlists the aid of the police to prevent it. They capture the much-sought Sid Nee, and Mike's way to Kate's promise of marriage is a short and unobstructed one.

Universal Program

Animated Weekly No. 144—UNIVERSAL—DECEMBER 9.—This issue shows Lincoln Beachey flying at San Francisco, Calif., his Excellency, the Governor of Bombay, viewing the cup race at Poona, India, the wreck of the Hanalei at San Francisco, the Corona road race in California, the opening of Parliament in London and in the war section pictures of the French and Algerian troops near Ypres, Belgium and a new Scotch regiment leaving London for the front.

Lizzie's Fortune—STERLING—DECEMBER 10.—Lizzie Prune has three lazy boarders whose chief ambition seems to be to dodge paying their debts, and eat as much as they can get. Lizzie is in love with Arthur, but she is alone in her affection for he shares in the disdain in which she is held by the other two boarders. Their attitude changes considerably when it is noised about that Lizzie is heiress to a fortune. Arthur succeeds in winning her only to learn, after their marriage, that the report is false. He tries to escape, but Lizzie overtakes him, and smothers him with caresses.

Her Higher Ambition—FRONTIER—DECEMBER 12.—In search of health Fred, an actor, visits the West, and there meets Edythe. She refuses his proposal, telling him that her ambition is to become a prima donna. He realizes that this is impossible for her, and decides to cure the girl by sending her East to try-out. She has already obtained the necessary funds from her father, but returns them on receiving Fred's money, and it is lucky that she does so for the money was not her father's rightfully. A month later Edythe returns only to learn that "her higher ambition" has deprived her of Fred.

The Mill Stream—IMP—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 14.—Jack Thornby's kindness to Tom Craven, a wealthy city man whom he has found with a sprained ankle, receives poor repayment in the latter's making love to Jack's sweetheart, Mary. The girl is fascinated by the refined Craven, and drops Jack entirely. The day after the men come to blows over the affair Craven's dead body is found in the mill stream. Jack is tried for the murder and sentenced to twenty years in prison. Months later Mary finds the remains of a tramp beside the stream, and investigation discloses him as the murderer of Craven. Jack is released, and Mary gladly accepts his proposal of marriage.

The Wayward Son—VICTOR—DECEMBER 14.—A pretty little story of an old man who yearns for the wayward son who ran away from home years before to become a sailor. The boy returns, and meets his old sweetheart on the street. Through the influence of the village minister, the girl's father, the ne'er-do-well is reformed, and his old affection for his aged parent is awakened within him.

Such a Mistake—CRYSTAL—DECEMBER 15.—Mr. and Mrs. Huff are extremely jealous of each other, and the situation is not improved any by Huff's consoling the maid, Nellie, when he finds her crying. Of course, Mrs. Huff thinks he is making love to the girl and retaliates. His jealousy flares up at this, and the Huff household is in a fair way to be broken up until Huff compromises with his wife, and they both promise to forget and forgive. On the same reel:

The Glass Pistol—CRYSTAL—DECEMBER 15.—Sleek, college bred Arthur seeks to make a strong impression on Grace Smithe by capturing a trampish-looking man, and chaining him to the wall in the jail. Unluckily for the young suitor the man turns out to be Grace's father who has been forced to change clothes with a tramp. Needless to say, Arthur receives his.

The Ghost of Smiling Jim—GOLD SEAL—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 15.—Grace Cunard and Francis Ford are featured in this weird story. Higby and his band "jump" the claim staked out by Harry and Jim, and defend it against its rightful owners when they return from the town. Harry is killed, and Jim, falling over a cliff in his flight narrowly escapes death, but loses his memory. His wife and little daughter come West, but cannot find any trace of Jim. Some time later the girl, now alone in the world, determines to obtain a close view of the ghost said to haunt a certain section of the mountains at night. The specter, she finds, is a grizzled old man. A storm comes up, and a tree struck by lightning strikes the hermit a glancing blow on the head in falling. This restores his memory, and he recognizes the girl as his daughter. They conceive a way of recovering the land "jumped" by Higby, and the end of the story finds them established in a beautiful home, enjoying the fortune unlawfully amassed by Higby.

A Game of Wits—ECLAIR—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 16.—George Howard's need of money overcomes his scruples, and he steals a government treaty, intending to make and sell at a high figure a duplicate of it. The theft is discovered instantly, and Howard is obliged to flee to escape arrest. Donna Inez, a spy in the employ of a Central American power, seeks him out, and attempts to steal the treaty outright, but he catches her. Then she resorts to worldly wiles and infatuates him. Just as Howard is about to fall into the trap laid for him, Steele, a secret service man, interferes, and saves the boy from committing treason. As none but himself has learned the contents of the treaty Howard receives only a slight punishment for his crime.

How Father Won Out—JOKER—DECEMBER 16.—Ernie and Eddie are roommates and rivals for the hands of Betty, a pretty waitress. Eddie becomes jealous of the headway made by Ernie, and writes the latter's father, telling him of his son's scandalous actions. Father hurries to the scene, but on the way stops into Betty's restaurant, and falls in love with the girl. The ending of the story finds two much disappointed youths gazing at their idol, Betty, who is now Ernie's mother-in-law.

Within the Gates of Paradise—IMP—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 17.—The European war has brought straightened circumstances to the Hayes home. Tom Hayes, the father, is out of work, and becomes desperate on hearing his children forecast what they think Santa Claus will bring them. They do not doubt for a moment that Santa will not come for the children of the wealthy mill-owner residing at the top of the hill have told them that they also expect him. On Christmas eve the Hayes children, standing out in front of the millionaire's mansion, perceive the wonderfully decorated tree and toys within, and enter to help themselves, believing that Santa will not mind. Rifle in hand, the little boy sees a masked man climb through the window, and fires. The shot arouses the family and the burglar turns out to be Hayes. Mrs. Hayes rushes in, and pleads for her husband's forgiveness. The millionaire not only grants it, but sees that they have a happy Christmas, and promises the millhand steady work.

Ambition—REX—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 17.—Belle La Veer is in love with John Willis, an artist, but he considers her only a friend, and marries Marion Davis, an ambitious young actress. Five years later their little son, Don, becomes ill at a time when John's pictures are not selling very well, and Marion goes back on the stage. She and John quarrel about her keeping company with other men, and they separate, Marion taking Don. She neglects the child, and even when it is dangerously ill pays little attention to it. John is summoned, but arrives only a few minutes before the boy's death. He publicly denounces Marion for her lack of mother-love, and leaves, her, seeking his old friend Belle. She consoles him, and, good-hearted creature that she is, brings about a re-union between him and Marion who has since changed her ways.

The Fatal Hansome—STERLING—DECEMBER 17.—Bobbie flirts with a pretty girl, invites her to ride in his hansome, and hires one of his rival cabmen, Noodles, to drive for him. Things go along fine until Noodles' curiosity gets the best of him, and, peeking into the cab, he discovers that the lady passenger is none other than his sweetheart. In a rage he whips up the horse, and the animal runs away. A wild ride ensues, ending by the cab's plunging off of the end of a pier into the water. A party of dockmen attempt to rescue the people, but become disgusted with the results of their efforts, and leave them floundering about in the water.

The Heart of the Hills—VICTOR—(THREE REELS)—DECEMBER 17.—'Lizabeth Anne, a child of the wilds, overhears two men discussing a big deal in which they have duped her father into selling, for a mere trifle, valuable coal lands. She hastens to her father with the news, and he attempts to recover his property by force. Young Matthews, the land shark's son, is wounded in the battle, and 'Lizabeth nurses him back to health. His sweetheart, learning of the love affair between the pair, seeks to be revenged upon the girl by inviting her to the city, and endeavoring to corrupt her, but the scheme proves a failure. 'Lizabeth becomes a favorite with all whom she meets, and later returns to her home in the hills to become the bride of the young surveyor, Matthews. The girl's father is made a partner in the mining company to whom he has sold his property.

His Dog-Gone Luck—NESTOR—DECEMBER 18.—On the same reel with this comedy is "Here and There in Japan with Homer Croy." Eddie, the actor, proves very lax in paying his bills, and the landlady refuses to allow him another meal. He and the landlady's daughter, Victoria, are in love, and together they concoct a scheme that will put Eddie in right in the eyes of the girl's mother. They frame up a fake holdup, and Eddie, the hero, becomes the landlady's idol forever by recovering her "stolen" poodle.

Christmas Spirit—101 BISON—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 19.—On being routed from his box-car home Harry, an old tramp, asks for food at one of the houses in the village. He is taken in, fed, and plays Santa Claus for the Christmas Eve party. Afterwards he tells his story to the people who have shown him such kindness. Years before he had been a sailor, and had ben stranded on a strange island. Returning home months later he was unable to find any trace of his family, and became a purposeless wanderer. His story the fact that he is John's and Mary's father, long since given up as dead. The children run downstairs to say good-night, and in the final scene are seen clambering about on the knees of their light-hearted grandfather.

His Doctor's Orders—JOKER—DECEMBER 19.—When Henry finds himself besieged with an attack of too much mother-in-law he induces his old friend, Doc Summers, to help him out of the mess. Doc complies by ordering Henry to take an ocean voyage. Later, reports appear in the newspaper about the vessel's going down at sea. Wifey dons mourning garments, and takes up living at a gay summer resort in an effort to forget the catastrophe. Henry, also vacationing, discovers her, and becomes a ship-wrecked husband by rowing out a ways, throwing away his oars, and drifting about. He is rescued, and treated like the prodigal son until the steamship company denies the report of the vessel's sinking. Henry is thereupon treated most rudely by his angry wife.

The Jewel of Allah—ECLAIR—DECEMBER 20.—A jewel having the power of restoring sight comes into the Sultan's possession, and he commissions the prime minister, and a body of men to take it to the United States to have it set. They leave it with Manderson who has a blind daughter. The jeweler reads of the stone's wonderful power, hurries to his shop, takes it from the safe, and returns home. Meanwhile, however, the prime minister and his men have seen the removal of the jewel from the safe in the depths of a crystal ball. Then enter Manderson's house intent on recovering the stone. He, thinking them thieves, switches out the light, and fights them. Ellen enters the room feeling her way about, and her eyes come in contact with the stone which restores her sight. Manderson's explanation reassures the Hindoos that the jewel is perfectly safe in his possession, and it is returned to him to be cut and set.

The Baron's Bear Escape—L-KO—DECEMBER 20.—The Baron Hasenpheffer is not loved very much by his rival, Wallace, who decides to give him a good scare by clothing himself in a bear skin. His disguise is so good that the Baron falls over a precipice in his fright. He catches hold of a tree growing out on the face of the cliff, but it's breaking precipitates him into the mud hole at the bottom of the mountain. One by one the various members of the rescue party lose their footing and fall down upon him, becoming a muddy, scrambling mass.

A Page From Life—REX—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 20.—Breen, the leader of a band of crooks, takes advantage of the straightened circumstances existing in the Carter home, and induces the artist to join the band and forge checks. Poor Carter's daughter, Rita, knowing nothing of her father's conection with the crooks, encourages the attentions of Maybrick, a wealthy young man of excellent family. Breen becomes insanely jealous at this, calls upon Carter, and a stormy interview ensues. What Rita overhears of the conversation causes her to break with Maybrick, not feeling worthy of him. He, however, is not satisfied with her explanation, and learns her real reason. In an attempt to revenge himself upon Breen, Carter is shot, and lives only long enough to bless Rita and Maybrick, and wish them a long and happy married life.

Feature Programs

Alco

The Tigress—POPULAR—(FIVE REELS)—DECEMBER 7.—Madame Olga Petrova is featured in this story, which is laid in Russia and America. Her role allows a wide range of dramatic work, as it calls for her to appear as a mother, a degenerating wife, a malicious woman and finally a revengeful creature who sees nothing beautiful in life.

Alliance

The Last Egyptian—OZ—(FIVE REELS)—DECEMBER 7.—Kara is told by his grandmother that Lord Roane, an Englishman, had dishonored a daughter of the Imperial house years before and that the task of avenging Roane rests with him, as he is the last of its descendants. Kara takes enough treasures from the royal chambers to carry out his purpose and goes to Cairo. Here he meets Lord Roane and plans to avenge his family through the nobleman's grand-daughter, Lady Aneth. He is refused her hand in marriage, but forces her to consent when he drives Lord Roane to the edge of ruin by defeating him at the gambling tables. Kara then arranges a mock marraige, but on the eve of the ceremony Lady Aneth is rescued by her lover, who hurries her to his yacht and sends her up the Nile. Kara and a band of desert outlaws follow and capture the vessel. The robber chief holds Lady Aneth a prisoner, refusing to deliver her to Kara until he has been paid. Kara hastens to the royal chambers for gold and is followed by Lady Aneth's father. In the struggle which follows, the Egyptian is locked in the tomb and left to perish. Lady Aneth's father is killed by a slave girl through a mistake, and thus the honor of Kara's house is avenged. A column of British troops capture the robbers and Lady Aneth is restored to the arms of her lover.

Box Office

The Thief—BOX OFFICE—(FIVE REELS).—Marie Landau loves a man who cares more for a woman's clothes than for herself. To please him she runs up a large bill at a modiste's, thinking that when she inherits a fortune, she believes will be left her, she will be able to settle her accounts. In time they are married and Marie continues her extravagance. They visit the Legardes home, where Marie meets the son of the house. He at once falls in love with her, but restrains himself. The modiste threatens to ask Marie's husband for the money and Marie, in desperation, steals from Madame Legardes. The theft is discovered and, to shield the woman, the son assumes the blame. His father orders him to leave home but at the last moment Marie's selfishness yields to her better self and she confesses that she is the guilty one.

The End of the Bridge—BALBOA—(THREE REELS)—This thrilling film deals with the operations of a band of crooks, who are being closely followed by a detective. After completing a smuggling deal the crooks give the detective an opening which he takes advantage of. He disguises himself as a stevedore and by mingling with them learns that one of their number desires to reform. He gives the man every assistance possible and, after the others have been arrested, starts him on a new path in life and marries his sister, with whom he has fallen in love. J. Francis McDonald, Madeline Pardee and Fred Whitman have the leading roles.

Eclectic

The Silent Accuser—Pathe—(Four Reels).—The plot of this subject revolves around the invention of a telephone which permits one person talking to another to also see him or her. In this case it enables the inventor-hero to see the danger of his sweetheart and rescue her. The villain who tries to steal the phone is electrocuted while attempting to interest some capitalists in the scheme. A complete review will be found on page 832 of this issue.

The Perils of Pauline (19th Episode)—Pathe—(Two Reels).—Harry is called out of the city on business, leaving Pauline alone. Owen hires a crook named Wrentz to take the place of Balthazar and together they form a plan whereby they will get Pauline in their power. Owen secures some fake letterheads, giving the address of a fictitious Philadelphia publishing concern, and on these writes to Pauline, asking her to call on them in regard to writing a story. Pauline goes to the city and falls into the hands of Owen and his accomplice. She is placed in a trunk and carried out into the country. The auto in which they are riding is wrecked and Pauline and Owen alone emerge alive. The girl escapes from her pursuer, only to encounter a huge gorilla, which has escaped its keepers. Just as the gorilla is about to kill her a policeman arrives and in the struggle which follows, the brute is killed.

Jolts of Jealousy—Pathe.—Gladys' husband is so jealous of her that he is positively disagreeable. She cannot venture out of the house without being accused of flirting. Jennie Olsen, the hired girl, starts a correspondence romance with Hense Yensen, who has advertised for a good-looking wife, and accidentally sends him Gladys' picture instead of her own. When Hense comes to call he, of course, thinks that Gladys is Jennie and insists on making love to her. Gladys' husband happens on the scene and for a time the house is alive with scurrying people, flying furniture, and whistling bullets. Hense's capture brings about an explanation and hubby is forced to seal his promise to fight jealousy by kissing the buckle on Gladys' slipper. C. R. C.

A Temperamental Whiffles—Pathe—(Two Parts).—Next to Max Linder, A. Prince, more commonly known by his permanent character name, Whiffles, is probably the most talented comedian of the Pathe-Paris stock company, and one of the most popular fun-makers on the legitimate stage in France. In this picture he is seen as a long-haired exponent of the musical art who has a mother-in-law. As a plain statement this latter assertion is only of passing notice, but in Whiffles' life it meant much more—continual arguing, trouble, and finally a divorce from Miriam, his wife. Whiffles later becomes married to Brisac's daughter, and lives happily with his father-in-law. Brisac goes away for a trip, and returns with a wife. He is horrified to learn that he, too, has fallen into the clutches of Whiffles' former mother-in-law, and chases Miriam and her scheming mother from the house. C.R.C.

The Quality of Mercy—Pathe—(Two Reels).—Paul Capellani, recently killed in the European war, plays the leading part in this picture as Charles Leslie, the young fellow whose engagement to Suzanne Graydon is strongly opposed by her father who wishes to marry his daughter to the wealthy Louis Canby, declaring that love is an unknown factor in the marriages of this modern day. To escape being forced into marrying Canby Suzanne leaves home, and takes refuge in the apartments of Leslie. He sends for his mother to take care of the girl. Graydon bursts into the room in a fury, and shoots Leslie. Later he regrets his rash action, but Suzanne will not hear his apologies. Leslie recovers, and the story ends happily in the couple's receiving the blessings of both Graydon and Mrs. Leslie. C.R.C.

General Special

Sylvia Gray—Vitagraph—(Four Reels).—Henry Gray is a failure as a playwright and his wife, Sylvia, leaves him and goes with a wealthy clubman, taking their little daughter, Sylvia, with her. One of Gray's plays is accepted and he is paid $5,000, which he puts in a hole in the wall of his home. He then wanders off, his mind a blank. Little Sylvia's nurse takes her from her mother and is going to bring her home, but when she finds Gray gone she decides to keep the child herself. Gray secures a position in a restaurant and is present when Sylvia kills her rich lover, as he has proved untrue to her. Still Gray's mind is not restored. Twenty years later, Sylvia, worn out, has returned to her former home, while Gray is a blind wanderer. Little Sylvia has grown to womanhood under the care of her nurse and is an artist's model. She is in love with Vanveldt, the man for whom she poses, and is very happy until a hypnotist comes into her life and casts a spell over her. He forces her to leave her lover and go with him. Gray and Sylvia's mother are united and the hypnotist and Sylvia stop at their home one night. The hypnotist learns of the $5,000 and determines to get it without implicating himself. Under his influence Sylvia is about to murder her father when the hypnotist's former wife kills him, thus destroying his power. Sylvia is united to her parents and all are later joined by Vanveldt and Sylvia's nurse.

Fantasma—Edison—(Five Reels).—Prince Arthur wins the hand of Princess Lena, but Zamaliel, monarch of evil and darkness, separates them. Through the influence of Fantasma, and with the assistance of Pico, the lovers are reunited after many adventures. A complete review will be found on page 809 of the December 12th issue.

The Battle of Love—Chandler and his sweetheart, Bessie Wells, have a lovers' quarrel and a friend bets their fathers that he can reunite them. A fake murder is arranged and Chandler accused. In trouble, Bess clings to him and they are married before they learn of the plan. A complete review will be found on page 841 of this issue.

The Ghost Breaker—Lasky—Five Reels)—December 7.—A young American agrees to help a princess search a haunted castle for wealth that should belong to her. He finds that the ghost is nothing but a duke, who is himself seeking the fortune. The American secures not only the wealth but also the princess. A complete review will be found on page 834 of this issue.

Sawyer

The Life of Shakespeare—Trans-Oceanic—(Six Reels).—The opening scenes show the youth of Shakespeare. He composes poems while he is supposed to be employed by a lawyer and is dismissed. Later he meets Charlotte Clopton of Clopton Hall and through her influence mingles in the select society, where his art is appreciated. In another chamber of Clopton Hall, Sir Hugh Clopton shelters an agent sent to assassinate Queen Elizabeth. The agent is killed and Sir Hugh arrested for complicity in the plot, just as Charlotte falls victim to a dreaded plague. She dies in Shakespeare's arms. Later Shakespeare meets Anne Hathaway and soon they are married. Their unhappy home life is then shown, ending when Shakespeare goes to London. For a time, he watches the players going in and out of the Globe, the first theater ever built, and soon his first successful play is given to the public. From then on his rise to wealth and fame is steady. In the final scenes the great man is shown dreaming of the wonderful plays which made him famous, while glimpses of scenes from them pass before his dreaming eyes.

The Master Key—(EPISODE FOUR)—UNIVERSAL—DECEMBER 7.—Hoping to rid himself of Dore, Wilkerson advises him to go to San Francisco to interest some capitalists in the mine as their funds are running low, but the young engineer suggests that Ruth Gallon go instead, Wilkerson consents, changing his plans accordingly. He notifies Mrs. Darnell, a woman of unsavory repute, to introduce Ruth to Charles Drake as the Mr. Everett with whom she is to make arrangements for obtaining financial support. Unsuspecting, Ruth meets "Everett," and wires Dore that she is safe. At the same time Dore receives a telegram from Mr. Everett stating that he has not yet seen Ruth. Suspicious, Dore sets out in a motor truck for the city. Wilkerson, knowing beforehand of Dore's intended trip, has taken the pin out of the truck's brake and set fire to the bridge at the foot of the hill. Dore is unable to stop the machine, but jumps just in time to escape death. The last scene shows him lying unconscious at the very edge of the canyon.

The Master Key—(EPISODE FIVE)—UNIVERSAL—DECEMBER 14.—Tom Kane, the mine's cook, finds the half-conscious Dore lying at the brink of the precipice. When he recovers consciousness Ruth's protector boards a train for San Francisco. Wilkerson in the meantime has arrived there, and met Mrs. Darnell and Drake. They drive to the Manx Hotel where Ruth has been registered as the couple's daughter. The girl overhears their plans to steal the deeds to "The Master Key" mine from her, and locks them in a dresser drawer. They hustle her away in a taxi bound for Chinatown. The hotel clerk and detective follow, and see Ruth forced into an opium den owned by Sing Wah, an old offender. Meanwhile Dore has arrived in the city; and been driven to the Manx Hotel. He is given the room just vacated by Ruth. He sends for the key to the locked drawer, and is astonished on opening it to find the deeds to "The Master Key" mine within.

Warners

The Little Rebel—GAUNTIER—(TWO REELS).—Gene Gauntier and Jack J. Clark have the leading roles in this two-reel production of the Civil War. A southern girl is the daughter of a Confederate colonel and is in love with a soldier in the Union ranks. He is sent to spy on the rebel fortifications and is discovered. After a thrilling escape he manages to reach his sweetheart's home and she dresses him as a colored mammy and takes him through the Confederate ranks as the battle is in progress. Several realistic scenes on the field of action are here shown. The ending of the film brings happiness to all the principals.

The Hello Girl of Angel Camp—PREMIER.—An Italian gardener rescues the girl from a runaway and believes the deed entitles him to marry her. Her lover resents this, as does the girl. After he has been chastised by the lover for his familiarity the Italian attempts to take the girl by force but is killed after he has wounded both the girl and her father. The girl's life is imperiled when she falls in front of a train after being shot. The hero, however, saves her.

One on Charlie—SUPERBA.—Charlie is refused by the woman of his dreams because he has no money. He hires a man to kill him but just before retiring he learns that he has inherited a fortune. The "murderer" comes to his house and Charlie flees in terror. He is followed by the man, who eventually catches him and tells him that his ladylove will accept him after all. Charlie De Forrest is featured.

World

The Seats of the Mighty—COLONIAL—(SEVEN REELS)—DECEMBER 7.—This adaptation of the famous novel by Sir Gilbert Parker portrays more vividly than the well-chosen sentences of the author could paint the incidents which made the subject so popular. The plot revolves about the love of the rival mistresses, Du Barry and Pompadour, for King Louis XV of France and the greed of Monsieur Doltaire, the king's lieutenant. A complete review will be found on page 837 of this issue.

In the Name of the Prince of Peace—DREYDA—(FOUR REELS)—DECEMBER 7.—A foolish prank for which her father refused to forgive her has driven a German girl to a French convent. War is declared. The nun's father comes to the monastery which has been taken by the French soldiers and the daughter recognizes him. Fighting is going on but a wounded soldier overhears her half-smothered exclamation. There is a dramatic struggle to get the nun to denounce her father. She is trapped into an oath on her cross and tells who he is. They are fighting to keep the Germans from capturing the convent and big field guns are shooting through openings in its walls on both side of its big church altar. The priests and nuns have just come in and, amid the smoke and flying destruction, have celebrated mass. When they leave, the nun's father is brought in and, with the respect from his soldier captors that the occasion demands, is ordered to step up on the altar stairs and there shot dead. This is war's insult to the Prince of Peace.

Miscellaneous

The Aviator Spy — APEX — (THREE REELS).—Sir Edward May, secretary of state and Cyril Courtney, his assistant, complete an important treaty. Cyril and Stella, Sir Edward's daughter, are in love and together they aid the poor. Old Mrs. Drake is one of Stella's proteges and when her son, Will, is caught poaching on Sir Edward's property, the secretary releases him for his daughter's sake and Will is very grateful. A foreign spy named Koffman, manages to gain entry to Sir Edward's home by rescuing May from drowning. He then plots with his confederates to secure the treaty. Will overhears the plot, but he is shot and rendered unconscious. Koffman succeeds in securing a photograph of the treaty and starts in an aeroplane for London. Cyril learns from Will what has happened and also secures an aeroplane in which he pursues Koffman. A battle in the air then follows which ends when Koffman uses his parachute to reach the ground. Cyril glides to the ground and the pursuit continues in autos. In rounding a turn, Koffman's machine overturns and he is killed. Cyril secures the treaty photo and returns it to Sir Edward.

She Stoops to Conquer—(COSMOFOTOFILM—FOUR REELS).—Hardcastle and Sir Charles Marlow desire their children to marry, but young Marlow, who is bold enough with working girls, is bashful in the presence of society belles. His friend Hastings, however, persuades him to visit the Hardcastles, Hastings himself being in love with Mrs. Hardcastle's niece, Constance Neville. Tony Lumpkin, a joker, tells the young men that Hardcastle is really nothing but an innkeeper and when the boys reach his home they treat him as such, much to his astonishment. Hastings learns of the mistake from Constance but tells young Marlow that the girls are stopping at the inn. Marlow is very bashful at first, but when he sees Kate Hardcastle in servant's clothes he at once falls in love with her and she reciprocates. When an explanation becomes necessary Kate tells Marlow that she is a poor relation of the Hardcastles. With the assistance of Tony, Marlow and Mrs. Hardcastle, who assists despite herself, Hastings elopes with Constance. Marlow asks Kate to marry him, still thinking her to be poor and after she has consented, everything is explained to him. Hastings and Constance return and all ends happily.

The Rise of Jones, Linick & Schaefer

Described by Neil G. Caward

THOUGH the following pages will describe the opening of the first motion picture theater in Chicago and the state of Illinois; though it deals with the rise of the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, which today is interested in the largest string of theaters in the United States, through its affiliation with Marcus Loew and what used to be the Sullivan-Considine chain of houses; though it has to do with the formation of the Chicago chain of eighteen houses controlled by the above firm and begins shortly before the opening of the Orpheum theater, said to be the best attended house in all America, still it is a Christmas story, for it was on December 26, 1905, the day following Christmas, that Aaron Jones first conceived the idea of opening a picture show in Chicago.

The firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, often times slangily referred to as "the jitney kings," today controls a chain of eighteen theaters in Chicago alone whose entire seating capacity runs above 21,000, and each of these houses gives from three to fourteen performances daily. Among them are a number of houses with a seating capacity of 1,700 and above, while scarcely any of them fall as low as 500, and the admission prices range all the way from five cents to $1.50. It is roughly estimated that 50,000 people every day witness films in the various houses controlled by the J. L. & S. combination, and one house alone during 1913 registered on its turnstile the enormous total of 2,840,000 attendance, a sum larger than the whole population of the city of Chicago. By way of entertainment in their theaters, Jones, Linick & Schaefer book in the neighborhood of fifty reels of film every day, and consequently are bookers of practically every first run release of every program on the market, their daily rental being estimated at $1,000 per day.

To begin at the beginning, Aaron Jones, an humble newsboy on the streets of Chicago, saved his pennies with an eye to the future, a practice which he continued when, later on, he became a bookkeeper in a Chicago railroad office, and when opportunity offered, secured a peanut concession at what was then called Ferris Wheel Park. Mr. Jones' judgment was more than vindicated by his returns on this investment, and some time later he became associated with Felix Blei in a traveling vaudeville attraction called Schiller's varieties. The advance agent of this attraction was none other than Martin Beck.

A few years later, Mr. Jones conceived the idea of an open air amusement park for Chicago and with one other succeeded in interesting Mr. Beifeld, who happened to be his landlord, in such an enterprise. They contemplated spending no more than ten or twelve thousand dollars for their park, but to get a better idea of the sort of entertainment they had best provide, the three visited New York, where Dreamland had only just been opened, and the nature of entertainment there offered proved a revelation to them and all thoughts of establishing a summer park in Chicago on the small basis instantly vanished. Returning to the Windy City, the White City Construction Company was formed and stock in excess of $1,000,000 was sold within the next few months. Aaron Jones at the opening of the new White City became manager of concessions, and it was there that his intimate acquaintance with Adolph Linick and Peter Schaefer was really formed.

On December 26, 1905, Mr. Jones, strolling down State street, chanced upon an auction sale of suits and cloaks belonging to Williams & Company, and stepping in inquired of the auctioneer: "What does this stock consist of?"

"Everything you see and the lease," was the reply.

Without an instant's hesitation, Jones, who had at that time less than a dollar in his pocket and a balance at the bank of an extremely modest size, wrote out a check for the sum of $4,200, thus acquiring not only the stock of suits and cloaks, but the lease of the building. This structure still stands today on State street and is now occupied by the firm of Browning, King & Company, but Jones in a moment of inspiration had selected it as the site for the first moving picture theater in the state of Illinois.

Again out on the street, he walked less than a block and encountered Peter Schaefer, who was en route to a depot to take a train. Stopping him, Jones inquired: "Want a good thing, Pete?" to which Schaefer replied: "Sure! what is it?"

Jones told him, and Schaefer became a partner on the spot, accepting one-third interest and giving Jones a check for a few hundred dollars. Jones dashed to the bank with the money given him by Schaefer to deposit it against the check which he had given to the auctioneer, and then visited the Boston Store, where in less than thirty-five minutes after buying the Williams & Company's lease and stock, he had disposed of the entire stock of suits and cloaks to the proprietor of the Boston at a good profit.

Ralph T. Kettering.

By depositing the check received for the suits and cloaks, Jones made good his own check and left a small balance in his favor. He reserved one-third interest in the new enterprise for his friend, Adolph Linick, whom he had met at White City and who had been a partner of his previously in the Midland Machinery Company, the pioneer manufacturers of a penny-in-the-slot machine, and who at that time was visiting his family in Germany.

Entrance to Orpheum Theater on State street.

Next day Jones arranged with a decorator to transform the store into a motion picture house and within a few days it was opened to the public with Norman Field, today manager of the Colonial theater of Chicago, as its manager, Mr. Field thus becoming the oldest employee in the service of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, though there is a lapse of a short time between the date when this first theater was closed and the time when he returned to Chicago from London. He again entered the employ of Jones, Linick & Schaefer after having been manager of concessions at Earls Court, London.

Schaefer had not only paid off all their obligations, settled for the entire equipment and service used in their theater, and gotten back all their original expense, but were able to divide a profit of $8,000.

The lease of their store theater expired at this time, and no offers to Browning, King & Company, who had leased the building over their head, would induce that firm to give them another tenancy, so a store directly across the street from the Palmer House was rented and there another picture show was opened under the name of "Hale's Tours of the World," an amusement which will be instantly recognized by old-time exhibitors, since the Hale's Tour shows at some time or another have had their innings in practically every city and town in the United States.

Norman E. Field,
Mgr. Colonial Theater.

So successful was this enterprise that shortly afterwards what was then called the Lyric theater was opened on Van Buren street between Dearborn and State streets, and this also was made a picture theater. Realizing the possibilities in the new form of entertainment, Messrs. Jones, Linick & Schaefer disposed of their Lyric theater and on the site of their Hale's Tour show, on State street, they erected what is still known as the Orpheum theater, with a seating capacity of 1,000. When it was built every theater manager in Chicago predicted ill luck for it, because of the big electric peacock over the entrance, which theatrical superstition regards as an omen of ill, but it stands today with a record of attendance not exceeded by any other picture theater in the United States.

Siegmund Faller,
Mgr. Bijou Dream.

The Orpheum, it may here be stated, was the first picture house in the country to eliminate the ballyhoo, or secret phonograph, which used to be thought necessary to attract patronage. Sam Levin was made house manager and has been with the firm continuously since that time, today holding the title of general manager of all the Jones, Linick & Schaefer enterprises, while George Moore, then house policeman, is today manager of the Orpheum theater. In this connection it may be said that Jones, Linick & Schaefer conduct all their enterprises on a merit system. Whenever promotions are in order, or when new positions are to be filled, it is invariably the case that an employee of long standing is selected from within their own ranks, while the outsider has to begin at the very bottom of the ladder. This system has resulted in intense loyalty on the part of the employees and Messrs. Jones, Linick & Schaefer are both respected and admired by practically every individual in their employ, from house manager to usher and door-tender.

John G. Burch,
Mgr. McVickers Theater.

Soon after the opening of the Orpheum, the Bijou-Dream, which stands next door to the Orpheum, was opened, though it was not at that time a direct competitor of the Orpheum, since it was devoted to vaudeville and entertainment of the penny arcade sort, with a dime museum on the second floor, though nowadays it is the home of feature pictures, and holds the record of the longest run on State street of any film shown in Chicago.

George Moore,
Mgr. Orpheum Theater.

Within another year the Lyric, on State street near Van Buren, was erected, this house being, with a single exception, the only theater in the world which never closes. The manager proudly asserts the lights have not been out, the doors closed or the projection stopped for a single moment in seven years, which exhibitors will readily concede as a record unequaled by any other house. The Premier theater, at State street near Jackson boulevard, went up almost at the same time as the Lyric and then a few months thereafter the Gem theater was built.

From this time on the growth of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer firm was truly phenomenal. In 1908, with the Lyceum theater at Cottage Grove avenue and Thirty-ninth street, the J. L. & S. enterprises were extended to all residential sections of the city. The Wilson avenue and the Williard theaters on the north and south sides respectively, being big houses which began with a combined vaudeville and picture program, which style of entertainment is still in vogue in many of the J. L. & S. houses. Such theaters as the Plaza, at North avenue near Sedgwick street (first called the Comedy); the Keystone, at Sheridan road; the Century, at West Madison and Loomis streets; the Garfield, at West Madison street and Sacramento avenue; the Star, at Milwaukee avenue and Robey street; the Eagle, near North and Washtenaw avenues; and the new American at Ashland boulevard and Madison street, have either been bought or erected at short intervals and all have proven successful.

Louis J. Jones,
Mgr. Studebaker Theater.

Needless to say all these houses are equipped throughout with the most up-to-date projection apparatus, and seats of a de luxe character, while only the statement that the ornamental plaster work and the lighting fixtures were furnished by the Decorator's Supply Company, is necessary to describe this portion of the equipment.

A year and a half ago the theatrical world was dumbfounded to learn that Jones, Linick & Schaefer had acquired the Colonial theater on Randolph street near State street, in the heart of Chicago's loop. This house, which was formerly the Iroquois, had been devoted exclusively to musical comedy and legitimate drama, and the thought that it might become a vaudeville and picture house was considered an impossibility until the entrance of the J. L. & S. interests. Staggering though this new statement was, it was followed six weeks later with the announcement that McVicker's theater, Madison street, between Dearborn and State streets, had been acquired by the same interests and would be devoted in the future to vaudeville and pictures. Traditions of long standing were thus shattered over night, for up to the date of the J. L. & S. purchase, McVicker's had been the scene of early theatrical activities in Chicago, and through

A few months later the LaSalle theater, devoted to musical comedy, was acquired by Jones, Linick & Schaefer, and immediately following that a lease was closed for the Studebaker theater, on Michigan avenue near Van Buren street.

When Aaron Jones made his connection with

The New American theater, only recently opened.

Marcus Loew to take over the Sullivan-Considine circuit of theatrical houses, the J. L. & S. enterprise acquired an interest in 175 houses almost over night, and when one considers the two or three hundred houses controlled by Mr. Loew, together with those of Sullivan-Considine and Jones, Linick & Schaefer, one instantly sees that close up to 400 houses are operated and controlled by this gigantic theatrical merger.

In Chicago the J. L. & S. houses, seating capacities and prices of admissions are as follows: The La Salle, playing musical comedy, 1,000, 25c to $1.50; the Williard, stock, 1,400, 25c and 50c; the Empress, vaudeville and pictures, 1,600, 10c, 20c and 30c; the Studebaker, pictures, 1,600, 25c; McVicker's, vaudeville and pictures, 1,700, 10c, 20c and 30c; the Colonial, vaudeville and pictures, 1,600, 10c, 15c and 25c; the American, vaudeville and pictures, 1,700, 10c, 15c and 25c; the Orpheum, pictures, 1,000, 10c; the Bijou-Dream, pictures, 800, 10c; the Premier, pictures, 500, 10c; the Star, vaudeville and pictures, 1,400, 5c and 10c; the Plaza, vaudeville and pictures, 1,200, 5c and 10c; the Crystal, pictures, 1,100, 5c; the Century, pictures, 1,100, 5c; the Keystone, pictures, 400, 5c; the Garfield, pictures, 1,200, 5c; the Lyric, pictures, 1,200, 5c; the Lyceum pictures, 1,100, 5c. All of the above representing a total seating capacity of 21,000 and average admission prices above 10c.

As already stated, Samuel Levin, first manager of the Orpheum theater, is today general manager over all the Jones, Linick & Schaefer enterprises. The publicity department of the J. L. & S. houses and undertakings is in charge of Ralph T. Kettering. Mr. Kettering has long been identified with amusements in Chicago, having been connected with Powers theater and in charge of various other amusements, and later the publicity manager of the entire White City for four years; this being the longest period which any single publicity man has served with any Chicago amusement park. Mr. Kettering has a wide acquaintance among the newspaper fraternity, and his geniality and popularity insures his "stuff" getting across, not only with most of the big dailies, but also among the theatrical journals and magazines, thus always insuring the J. L. & S. interests publicity of the widest sort.

Also Own Central Film Company

In addition to all their other interests, Jones, Linick & Schaefer have within the past year opened a film exchange called the Central Film Company, with offices above the Orpheum theater on State street, and from this center Jones, Linick & Schaefer have booked and controlled such features as "The Spoilers," the "Belgian War Pictures," filmed by the Chicago Tribune's staff photographer, "The Lineup at Police Headquarters," "Lay Down Your Arms," "Lena Rivers," etc. H. P. Spanuth is in charge of the exchange.

Handworth as a White Hope

Most folks in the film world know Harry Handworth as director of the Excelsior Feature Film Company, but in the forthcoming picture "In the Shadow" he displays his ability as a two-handed fist fighter. Handworth enacts the part of the mountain lover of Marie Boyd. William A. Williams also aspires to win the heart of the simple little fisher girl. This condition of affairs is the cause of jealousy, and Williams and Handworth enact one "first-class scrap" on the edge of a precipice. Handworth's greater weight finally tells and Williams falls from the edge of the rocks into the stream below, from which perilous position he is finally rescued by the girl, who was the cause of it all.

Edison Plant Destroyed

By a fire that burned with incredible swiftness, fanned by a high wind, the manufacturing plant of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., at Orange, N. J., was destroyed Wednesday night, December 9, a loss that will total nearly a million dollars. Due to magnificent personal courage and a remarkable exhibition of the "Edison family spirit" on the part of the employes, all the priceless negatives were saved. And as the Edison production studio is located in New York City, miles away, the management announces, the Edison film releases will go on without interruption. In fact, before 8 o'clock next morning and while the firemen were still pouring water on the ruins, film manufacturing was started anew in several of the buildings untouched by fire, and in other film printing concerns in Orange. The buildings, which are twenty-four in number, are all of the most modern fireproof construction, but the firemen were practically helpless as the city water supply was signally inadequate.

Sharply outlined in the fierce glare, sixty-seven-year-old Mr. Edison, issuing orders to his army of five thousand employes made a picturesque figure strongly suggesting a veteran general on a field of battle. Despite the fact that he carried no insurance except his own fire fund, his cheerfulness amazed all as he smilingly remarked in between times, "Well, I've gambled and I'm a good loser. Those buildings will go up again at once, but I'll see that this time I have my own fire protection and sufficient water."

The spread of the fire among the concrete buildings surprised all. The film plant was the last to take fire and motion pictures never recorded more heroic and self-sacrificing work than that of the employes fighting to get into the burning building to save the precious negatives. With explosions occurring frequently in the blazing plant, every entry made into the building was at a daredevil risk of life. T. A. Ward, an operator in the testing plant, was dragged out, overcome, with a film negative securely buttoned under his shirt to escape the danger of the heat. The flames were nearing the feature film department before it was discovered that two films, "Fantasma" and "The Colonel of the Red Huzzars," upon which the Edison people had spent so much time, were missing. Dashing a pail of water over his clothes, Fred Duryea broke past the firemen and disappeared into the building. Before long a barrel rolled out at the firemen's feet. Duryea slowly crawled after it. Knowing the foolhardiness of carrying the films through the heat, with a remarkable presence of mind, he had thrown the invaluable films into the barrel and rolled it ahead of him on the floor, where the heat was at a minimum.

The exact cause of the fire is not known. It started near the cabinet shop, which was adjacent to the film plant. The stock of current releases were all fortunately saved and no interruption whatever in the regular Edison release schedule was experienced.

"War Stuff" for Lasky Studio

The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company's studio in Hollywood, Calif., has suddenly assumed an extraordinarily martial aspect owing to the special preparations which are being made for the production there of Blanche Sweet's first Lasky-Belasco release—"The Warrens of Virginia."

It will be remembered that this play, which was written by William C. De Mille and produced under the management of David Belasco, is a story of the Civil War. As produced on the stage the war-like effects were necessarily restricted to a degree, but as seen on the screen this is positively to be the most elaborately realistic romance of war-times ever presented.

Guns, sabers, uniforms, all the equipment for infantry, cavalry and artillery, are being acquired almost by the carload. Field artillery, siege guns, mortars, rapid fire guns and all other weapons which were extant at the time of the Civil War are literally heaped all over the premises. Extra players are being engaged by the hundred, and the photodrama is surely going to reproduce the boys of '63 on both sides of the

Pathe's Realistic Drama of Stage Life

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

ONE'S heart and sympathy instinctively go out to poor Hurlburt, the young composer in Pathe's three-reel drama of stage life, "The Star of Genius." He is possibly to blame for the trials heaped upon him by being too trustful and a bit too absorbed in his art, but these are the very faults, or virtues as they may be, that find a lasting response in the sympathies of the spectator, and awaken his interest till he is not satisfied until he sees Hurlburt once more in possession of the rewards that are rightfully his.

M. Signor, a celebrity of the French stage, works an air of appealing human-interest into his characterization of the temperamental and generous musician, Hurlburt, that is seldom seen in artists, and especially composers. The general conception of such people is that they must have long, unkempt hair, be either faultlessly groomed or criminally neglectful in the matter of dress, and be eccentric in the fullest meaning of the word. Signor's opera-writer is an ordinary human being, endowed with exceptional musical talent, and just enough of the temperamental nature to place him in the artist's class without labeling him as a man devoid of the power of concentrating his mind on any subject but music.

Valerie has made the opera a success.

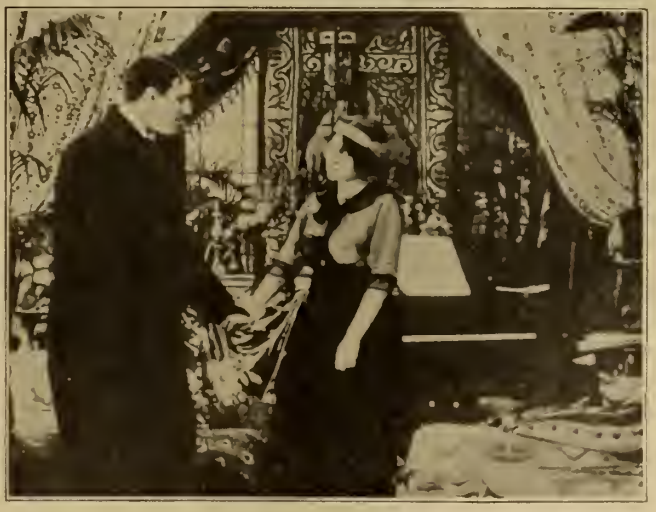
Another member of the cast of note is Mlle. Napierkowska, a famous French dancer, who plays the part of Valerie, the rose-girl, who later becomes the star of the opera-house in front of which she used to sell flowers. Mlle. Napierkowska is a splendid actress and an exceptionally graceful dancer. A few of the scenes are carried by her terpsichorean performances alone, and carried so well that one wishes they would raise the curtain on a few more scenes from "Caius and Caligula."



A masterly hand at direction is evident in the presentation of the story, and the arrangement and construction of its environment. The theater scenes are a wonderful illustration of the latter. If they were not actually taken in a theater nothing but inside information will betray the fact. In much the same way do little mannerisms and acts, things that are distinctive of the player's personality, continually crop out throughout the play. The actual occurrences each occupy only a few seconds', or possibly, as with the theater scenes, a half minute's time, but they help greatly in keeping one in the spirit of the play. An error in detail seems to glare at one with more persistence than does a big mistake, and it is for that reason probably that perfection in detail is of more actual value to a picture than some of its entire scenes. The lighting effects, soft tone, and distinctness of the photography are all that one could wish for.

Hurlburt's opera, "La Tolosa," proves to be a failure, and the young composer leaves the rehearsal depressed and discouraged. In front of the opera house his sympathy is aroused by seeing a poor young flower girl sobbing as though the whole world had turned against her. To Valerie her misfortune seems fully as great. Just a few minutes before, while counting her earnings, some hoodlums had attacked her and robbed her of the money.

Hurlburt takes the girl to his home and provides for her. To his surprise the composer finds that she has a remarkable talent for dancing, and gives her the leading part in his next opera, "Caius and Caligula." It is a big success, and the names of Valerie and Hurlburt are coupled with its fame. The day after the opera's much-applauded introduction Hurlburt receives a note from his protegee stating that she has gone away with the Vicomte d'Orcel. The composer realizes now that he is in love with the girl himself, and determines to bring her back.

Because of his parents' objection to his proposed marriage to the dancer, d'Orcel gives Valerie up and she secures an engagement in an opera that is shortly to be presented. Hurlburt learns of her new engagement, and, on hearing that the accompanist is ill, applies for the position for the dress rehearsal. His mingled feelings at being so close to Valerie prove to be too much for Hurlburt's weakened condition, and he falls to the floor in a faint. The doctor and the girl accompany him home where he recovers from the shock but suffers a clouded memory.

Seeing Valerie, he springs at her and attempts to choke the girl, but the doctor restrains him. Another mood takes the composer, and he sits down at the piano and plays. Valerie dances to his accompaniment—and the cloud passes from his memory. His only thought is that he is in love with the girl, and he disregards her desertion in the past entirely on finding that his love is returned.

Robert Broderick

Robert Broderick, leading man of the Dyreda Art Film Corporation, which is using the old Reliance studios at Yonkers, N. Y., has an international reputation as an actor, having played with such stars as Francis Wilson, Virginia Harned, Thomas Jefferson and many others. Mr. Broderick has been for several years one of the bright stars of the operatic stage and in various make ups of different characters he is said to have no equal. His first advent into the picture game was with the Kinemacolor Company on the coast, where he wrote and played the lead in the old fable, "Jack the Giant Killer." His portrayal of that difficult character was so excellent that he was made an offer by the western Kalem Company, which he accepted, and with which he remained for some time. He then came East and joined the eastern branch of that company and from there went to the Famous Players Company. His work with that company attracted considerable favorable comment and when his director, J. Searle Dawley, left the Famous Players Company to join the Dyreda Art Film Corporation, he took Mr. Broderick with him as his leading man. The Dyreda Company up to the present time has made two big feature pictures in which Mr. Broderick has played the lead and these pictures are being released through the World Film Corporation. The first picture, a four-reel subject, "One of Millions," has already been released and many expressions of approval have been made on the excellent work done by Mr. Broderick, and the other feature, "In the Name of the Prince of Peace," in four reels, will soon be released.

Secures Harris Songs

The World Film Corporation, through General Manager Lewis J. Selznick, has secured the motion picture rights to Chas. K. Harris's two greatest song successes, "Always in the Way" and "Break the News to Mother." The Dyreda Art Film Corporation, of which J. Parker Read, Jr., is general manager, has arranged to produce these two successes at its studios and the work of casting is said to have already begun at the Dyreda Art Film studios. Special productions are to be made for both of these films and it is planned that they will become sterling features in the World Film Corporation service.

Philadelphia Exhibitors' Ball

Despite the inclement weather which prevailed, a big crowd turned out to help make the annual ball held December 8 the most successful in the history of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania. With an orchestra of sixty pieces to furnish music for the dancing, Horticultural Hall, Broad and Locust streets, Philadelphia and its roomy dancing floor was packed by ten o'clock with joyous fans, exhibitors and photoplay stars. Romaine Fielding, Ormi Hawley, Clara Kimball Young, Edwin August, Edgar Jones, Lottie Briscoe, Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Edmund Breeze, Siegmund Lubin and Carl Laemmle were introduced from the stand just prior to the grand march at twelve o'clock. During the course of the evening's dancing a beautiful colored drawing of Miss Young was put up at auction, the proceeds going to the Belgium relief fund. The picture went to Siegmund Lubin and Carl Laemmle, who, clubbing together, paid over fifty dollars for it.

An event of the evening which proved its human-interest worth to those who were witnesses, was the meeting between Mr. Fielding and Edmund Breeze, famous legitimate star. Fourteen years had elapsed since the paths of these two artists crossed. Boxes at the ball were held by the Lubin Company, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and the Box Office Attractions Company.

Essanay Drama of Far Northwest

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

THE luxurious mansion of a society girl and the humble dwelling of a fur trader in the far Northwest form the settings for the principal scenes of "The Shanty at Trembling Hill," the two reel Essanay release of Friday, January 1.

Francis X. Bushman as Richard Scott, a young politician, who on account of ill-health is compelled to visit the Northwest and live out-doors, has an ideal role and appears to splendid advantage, while in the character of Gabrielle Boileau, Miss Nelle R. Craig makes her debut as an Essanay leading woman. In this same picture Miss Leona Anderson, another newcomer to the Essanay forces, makes her first screen appearance in the character of Frances Warfield.

As the story opens, Richard Scott, a rising young politician and candidate for the Canadian House of Parliament, is compelled to give up his candidacy on account of ill-health and to break off his engagement with Frances Warfield, a society belle, and visit the Northwest to live in the open air until his health is once more restored.

Schuyler interferes in Scott's love affair.

Frances is enraged when she is told of the ruin of her plans and abruptly dismisses Richard.

Later Scott save Larry O'Brien, a lumber camp foreman, when an enemy tries to stab him, and as a result agrees to go to Trembling Hill camp with O'Brien. There he meets Gabrielle Boileau, a beautiful but uncultivated girl of the wilds. They fall in love, but Larry, knowing of Scott's wealth and social position, thinks he is trifling with the girl and tells Scott that if he deceives her he will kill him.

Scott finds himself unable to remain in politics.

Scott is in deadly earnest, however, and asks Gabrielle to marry him. She consents, though her parents and an aged priest fear the marriage will not result happily.

A few days later Schuyler, a friend of Scott's, arrives on the scene and, learning of Scott's engagement, seeks to dissuade him from going ahead with the match, as he fears that he will ruin both his life and that of the girl's. As a clincher to his argument, Schuyler produces a note from Frances asking Scott to come back to her and saying that she is sorry for her cold treatment of him in the past and will atone for it if he will only return to her.

The old priest breaks the news to Scott's fiancee.

Scott refuses, however, and in desperation Schuyler tells the priest that Scott is already engaged to Frances and gives him the note as proof.

The priest compels Schuyler to show the note to Gabrielle and her parents. The girl is furious and in her anger seeks Scott and tries to stab him. He then returns to the city and Larry, hearing of the trouble, follows Scott to his club, where he tries to kill him, but Schuyler interferes and declares that he is himself to blame for what has happened. Larry demands proof and the three visit the Warfield home in time to witness Frances' marriage to another man.

Eventually satisfied Larry returns to Trembling Hill with Scott, where all is explained to the satisfaction of not only Gabrielle but her parents, the priest and her numerous friends. Gabrielle then leaps into the arms of Scott and the following day they are married by the priest.

"The Conspiracy"

John Emerson's characterization of Winthrop Clavering, author of thrilling stories and solver of mysterious crimes, is a clever one, as presented to the picture public in Charles Frohman's first film offering, through the Famous Players' Company, of the stage play, "The Conspiracy." The screen telling gives much more satisfying detail than the play could possibly have done. Several of the characters are pleasingly similar to those in the play and the sets are also very much alike. Though the humorous speeches made by the stage Clavering are lost to the patrons of the screen, still Emerson's behavior is sufficiently fun-inspiring throughout to make up for this slight advantage credited to the stage.

Mr. Emerson created the stage role of Clavering and does it and himself equal justice on the screen. Lois Meredith plays the leading feminine role and Iva Shepherd has a strong part in the character of Juanita, member of a blackmailing gang. Harold Lockwood is the typically breezy reporter and Hal Clarendon manages the heavy role of Morton, head of the gang.

Dodson Mitchell, Lois Meredith, John Emerson and Harold Lockwood in Famous Players' "The Conspiracy".

Dodson Mitchell as Detective Bill Flynn, Francis Byrne as Victor Holt, and Edward Durand as Savellie, complete a cast which takes good care of the presentation of "The Conspiracy."

Margaret Holt, sister of the assistant prosecuting attorney, comes to the city to visit her brother, but is taken by Juanita to a house of ill repute. After a few days she escapes and her brother determines to track down the gang. Margaret assists by applying at the business headquarters for the position of stenographer. She is successful in procuring it and manages not to be seen by Juanita. Fearing the law, Morton, head of the gang, arranges to go to Europe with Juanita. He secretes a sealed list of names of the gang under the table cover for someone who is to call for them, but Margaret secures the envelope and is caught by Morton, who returns unexpectedly. In self-defense, she kills Morton and escapes.

Clavering goes to work on the case and puts it into story-form. His stenographer leaves and he goes to a Girls' Refuge for a new stenographer. Margaret has gone there for safety and Clavering engages her, putting her to work on the story with which she is already familiar. She turns the sealed envelope over to Howell, the reporter, and he leaves it at a spot designated by the gang. He follows the man who takes it and when Victor Holt mysteriously disappears, Howell and Flynn search the neighborhood of the gang for his whereabouts. They find it, and help him to escape.

Meanwhile, Juanita has offered Clavering $500 for knowledge of Margaret. Clavering's deductions lead him to recognize his stenographer as the wanted girl but he gives his help to the law and Margaret, instead. He summons Juanita and others of the gang to his home and there they are trapped by Holt, Howell and Flynn. Margaret's fate has been of especial interest to Howell and the young couple rejoice at the pleasing end of their troubles at the hands of the gang.

Buys Twelve More States

Aaron Gollos of the Photoplay Productions Releasing Company, Wabash avenue, Chicago, this week secured twelve more exclusive state rights on the celebrated feature "The Littlest Rebel." Mr. Gollos already controlled the states of Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan and Indiana on this picture, but was so delighted with his success in booking it and the apparently great demand for the big war subject, that he closed a deal whereby he secures the exclusive rights to the film in Washington, Oregon, Utah, Idaho, Nevada, Montana, North Dakota, Colorado, South Dakota, Kentucky, Wyoming and Alaska.

Any live exchange man in any of the newly secured states can secure special booking privileges on the feature in question by communicating immediately with Mr. Gollos. Of course it will be a case of first come first served, so prompt action will be necessary upon the part of the exchange which is to secure exclusive territory within its state. Mr. Gollos is prepared to provide not only prints of the film but posters of all varieties, photographs, banners and lobby displays.

Summary of 1914 Filmland Events

By Clarence J. Caine

IN preparing this record it has been the aim of the writer to cover as nearly as possible all the vital happenings in the motion picture industry during the past year, and as many of the more significant minor events as possible. In the latter case, things which attracted attention either because they were innovations or because of their magnitude are the ones which have found a place. Foremost of the happenings is the entrance of feature programs into the industry. A year ago there was but one such organization, but up to the present time the number has swelled to a dozen or more. The advent of the serial film was another prominent feature.

The death of Charles J. Hite, president of the Thanhouser Company and a power in the Mutual Film Corporation, was an event which is to be deeply regretted by all men in the industry. From the exhibitors' point of view the greatest accomplishment of the year was the downfall of the dissenting factors in their ranks and the advance of the "get-together" movement.

The advancement of motion pictures during 1914 was marked and in this respect it was perhaps the most important milestone which has been passed thus far. The outlook for 1915 is an exceedingly bright one and when the summary of the coming year is compiled many changes will undoubtedly be chronicled.

Following is the tabulated list of events:

JANUARY.

First episode of "Our Mutual Girl," the Mutual Film Corporation's 52-part serial, was released.

Mutual Film Corporation closed contracts with a number of prominent writers, among whom were Paul Armstrong, Daniel Carson Goodman, E. Phillips Oppenheim and George Patullo, thereby securing some of their well known works, as well as an option on original scenarios.

Beginning of Selig's "Adventures of Kathlyn."

Vitagraph Company announced the release of Broadway Star Features.

New Reliance Motion Picture Company incorporated in New York with $1,000,000 capital. Harry Aitken was announced as organizer. One studio in Yonkers and one in Los Angeles, David W. Griffith was named as director-in-chief.

After a one-day session in Chicago, the government investigators handling the case of the Motion Picture Patents Company left for Alabama to secure other evidence.

Vitagraph announced the release of a special two-reel comedy every Friday.

Mutual Film Corporation secured General Villa's permission to film a story of his life, as well as to take scenes of his army during engagements in Mexico.

"Beauty" brand of the American Film Manufacturing Company announced first release. Margarita Fischer and Harry Pollard featured.

Jules Bernstein and M. E. Hoffman, of the World Special Films Corporation, and Lewis J. Selznick of the Photoplay Sales Company joined hands to buy exclusive features, these to be released through the former concern.

Meeting of Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League in Cincinnati. M. A. Neff elected president, J. H. Broomhall, secretary, and W. R. Wilson, treasurer.

Life Photo Film Corporation incorporated with capital of $100,000. Edward M. Roskam, president.

First annual ball and entertainment of the Milwaukee Exhibitors' Association held in that city.

Feature film exchanges of New York City formed a body known as Film Renters' Association to exercise the functions of a Board of Trade.

Dance and entertainment given at the new Thanhouser studio in honor of the anniversary of the fire which destroyed the old building.

Universal's west coast studios damaged by fire.

FEBRUARY.

At a meeting of the International Motion Picture Association, local of Chicago, Robert R. Levy was elected president, George Henry, secretary, and Sidney Smith, treasurer.

Second annual Screen Club ball, held at the Grand Central Palace, largely attended by New York film people.

Opening of the Vitagraph theater, 44th and Broadway, New York City.

The World Film Corporation absorbed the World Special Films Corporation.

The Klaw and Erlanger-Biograph productions were released to exhibitors for the first time.

The Reel Fellows Club of Chicago, a social organization of film men in the Windy City, held its first meeting.

The Famous Players Film Company and Henry W. Savage, Inc., announced their affiliation. The deal gave the Famous Players the rights to film all the stage successes controlled by Savage.

The Pathe Company and the Hearst newspapers reached an agreement whereby stories of the former's films appeared in the latter's papers.

The Eclectic Company opened a Chicago office with K. W. Linn in charge.

George Kleine's Italian studio was stated to be in the course of construction.

The second annual ball of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania was held in Philadelphia.

The first release of the Selig-Hearst News Pictorial occurred the latter part of this month.

MARCH.

The Leading Players Film Corporation founded with Agnes Egan Cobb in charge.

Eclectic's "The Perils of Pauline" series begun.

Wharton, Inc., leased a site near Ithaca, New York and began work on feature productions.

The studio of the Eclair Company at Fort Lee, N. J., was seriously damaged by flames, the loss being estimated at about $750,000.

The Famous Players Film Company formed an alliance with the prominent theatrical producer, Charles Frohman, thereby securing the film rights to all plays which he controlled. Plans were made to take some of the pictures in Europe.

Delegates from New York to California were present when the executive committee of the International Motion Picture Association met in Cleveland, O., on March 18 and 19. A compromise between the Cleveland faction of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the International Association was hinted at.

The Photoplay Authors' League of America was incorporated in Los Angeles with Frank E. Wood as president.

A fire seriously damaged the Edison studio in the Bronx on March 28. With the aid of the players, much of the film stored in the vaults was saved. The damage was estimated at $50,000.

APRIL.

Arnold Daly a Pathe Player

Arnold Daly, who through his work in "Candida" became in such a short space of time one of the most talked of actors in America, has signed with Pathe to take the leading part in the new serial, "The Exploits of Elaine." That Mr. Daly stands in the very front rank of the theatrical profession today is self-evident, and that he has been signed by Pathe for the new serial proves conclusively that "The Exploits of Elaine" will be a vastly different proposition from "The Perils of Pauline," in that the new story will require most artistic interpretation, and not depend so much upon sensational incidents for its interests. Mr. Daly is an object lesson to the ambitious young American by proving that there is plenty of room at the top and that true ability will be recognized in spite of all handicaps. Some ten years ago he was office boy for Charles Frohman, surely a sufficiently humble beginning in the theatrical profession to satisfy the most ardent admirer of such works of fiction as "From Cabin Boy to President." Born in New York, he showed the average New York boy's sublime indifference to the favorites of fame, and they still tell stories along Broadway of young Daly's scornful attitude towards the famous playwrights and theatrical stars who call upon Mr. Frohman. At an early age Daly was convinced that he could act and eventually prevailed upon Mr. Frohman to give him a chance in a small role. He soon showed that he possessed an intuitive dramatic sense, and his rise was steady. He was fortunate to have a part in "Pudd'n Head Wilson" under Frank Mayo, whose splendid experience and fine talent gave him much invaluable knowledge. After that engagement he played the boy in William Gillette's farce, "Because She Loved Him So," which was followed by the part of the mad lover in "Barbara Frietchie," with Julia Marlowe. Engagements in "When We Were Twenty-one," "Hearts Aflame" and "The Girl from Dixie," followed. All this time Mr. Daly's art had been broadening and taking on a finer quality. Unconsciously and gradually he had been fitting himself for his great success, "Candida." It is interesting to note that this great production, which afterwards played 132 days in New York, was first put on for matinees only by Mr. Daly to demonstrate "a worthy play which could not be commercially successful in New York." Shortly afterwards, against all advice, Mr. Daly needing a play as a stop gap, determined to try "Candida" on the New York public. It was done and each day saw a growth in the receipts. Before long it was the most talked of play in the city, and Mr. Daly was famous. He had proved once and for all the value of a serious production.

Arnold Daly.

Mr. Daly can be best described by the word "brilliant." He fairly scintillates as a player, a conversationalist and a story teller. He was the first man in New York to study George Bernard Shaw and see in him much more than a fiery and intellectual freak. Mr. Daly, in fine, is a real and serious student of the drama.

Being of Irish descent, Mr. Daly could not help but be witty. It is said of him that on one occasion he was invited to a dinner of the descendants of the Pilgrim Fathers and was called upon for a toast. He rose and with a rare twinkle in his eye, said as follows: "To the Plymouth Rock—the blarney stone of our dear America!" He is also epigrammatic, as the following recent statement of his will prove: "Culture will rid the world of war—unless war first rids the world of culture."

So Pathe has made a ten strike in securing this brilliant Irish-American actor, who is a thinker as well as an artist. As "Craig Kennedy" in "The Exploits of Elaine," he should gain new laurels and stamp the new serial with his decidedly interesting personality.

MacKenzie Gives Dinner

Donald MacKenzie, who has been directing the last episodes of "The Perils of Pauline," gave a dinner at the Hotel McAlpin on the night of Sunday, December 6, to the Patheites, both in the studio and office, who have been co-operating with him in his work. Those present were Fritz Whatne, who presided as toastmaster, Messrs. Kyle, St. Germain, Mink, Disch, Mohn, Van Arsdale, Steuernagel, Heinz, Zapetti, MacKenzie, Lang, Thompson, Crandall, Miller, Redmond, Meighan, Stocker, Davidson, Bardet and Misses Pearl White, Staats and Hannah Cohen. Everybody had to make a speech and some budding Demosthenes were disclosed. The dinner lasted six hours and all agreed that it was none too long.

Success Achieved

Popular favor and real success mark the presentation of "Damon and Pythias," the impressive photo-spectacle now being presented by the Universal Company at the New York Theater, New York City and at Fine Arts Theater, Chicago. The play is in six reels of wondrous beauty and is shown to the accompaniment of especially set orchestral music. The story is full of dramatic power, exciting episodes and thrilling climaxes with an appealing love story. The large audiences of playgoers are increased nightly by the attendance of lodges of Knights of Pythias, the order having endorsed the photo-play.

Selig's "The Flower of Fate"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

The lovers are united.

WITHOUT the aid of a complicated plot, but containing a number of human interest touches, the story of the two reel production to be released by the Selig Polyscope Company on Monday, December 28, entitled "The Flower of Fate," furnishes a splendid vehicle to exploit the histrionic ability of Edith Johnson and Lamar Johnstone.

Miss Johnson has been "tabbed" by the publicity department of the Selig Company as "the most beautiful girl in pictures" and while this reviewer does not care to fully concede the statement, nevertheless, it must be admitted that she possesses a charm that is rare. Her acting, while not quite finished at all times, is very appealing and her sympathetic portrayal of a country girl struggling for life in the city will doubtless endear her to the "fans." Mr. Johnstone, too, is seen to advantage in a role which calls for the portrayal of three distinct types, a farmer boy, a prospector and a gentleman of position. The other players are given very little to do but their acting is satisfactory.

The story deals with the life of a girl whose life is likened to a rose. She is passionately fond of the flower and it is utilized in a symbolic sense in several of the scenes. In the opening and closing views this comparison is especially effective, two roses dissolving into the figures of the girl and her lover in the former and vice versa in the latter.

The girl, whose name is Rose, is happily living at home in the country and is devoted to her rural lover when the story opens. The roses in the garden seem to be a part of their love and daily they visit them. Then one day an ambition to go to the city comes to her and she is not content until she fulfills her desire. Her lover is very sad but when he sees she is determined he does not put anything in the way of her going.

The parting.

In the city she secures a position as stenographer in a wealthy broker's office, after having studied amid discouraging circumstances. Her love for roses prompts her employer to give her one from the bouquet which he has on his desk. When the broker's wife sees Rose wearing the flower she becomes angry and orders her husband to dismiss the girl, which he does in order to quiet her. Rose's lover, Howard, grows restless when he does not hear from his sweetheart and goes West to seek his fortune in the gold fields.

Rose, out of work, sees an advertisement for an artist's model and secures the position. She poses for a picture called "The Rose" but when the artist makes advances to her and she rejects him she again finds herself without work. Time passes and she finds her funds growing lower and lower. Her fondness for roses again leads her to trouble and she is arrested when she takes one from a flower stand without paying for it. A theatrical manager is present at her trial and pays her fine. He then offers her a position in his company, which she gladly accepts, thus becoming a chorus girl.

Howard strikes a rich gold vein and disposes of his interest in the mine for a fabulous price. He comes to the city to search for Rose, establishing a fine home there. Rose makes good on the stage but one night she is lured to a cafe by the manager and a bouquet of roses again tempts her. The manager quarrels with another man over her and the next day he discharges her. Howard finds the picture entitled "The Rose" and buys it. Because he can find no trace of the girl he loves, he worships the portrait.

Thoroughly disheartened, Rose is about to end her life, when she is rescued by a Salvation Army lass. She persuades Rose to join her in the work of caring for the fallen. Time passes and one day Rose goes into the open door of a conservatory, a rose again luring her from her path. She finds herself locked in when she starts to leave and wanders into the mansion, which joins the conservatory. To her surprise and joy it proves to be Howard's home. Under the portrait of "The Rose" and surrounded by bouquets of the flower which has been such a vital part of her life, she is received into the arms of her lover.

Rolfe Affiliates With Fiske

B. A. Rolfe, head of the producing company which bears his name, left for Hollywood, Cal. this week where plans for the occupation of a studio, now being equipped, will take up most of his attention. Before leaving, however, Mr. Rolfe announced that he had formed an alliance with the prominent producing manager Harrison Grey Fiske, by which he secured the prinpical dramatic successes of this manager and that arrangements were going forward looking to the the presentation of Mrs. Fiske, undoubtedly one of the most dignified and famous of dramatic stars, in one of her former successes. Mr. Rolfe's arrangement with Mr. Fiske, the ramifications and obligations of the contract and the ultimate indulging in actual productional work by the artistic producer himself, makes the Rolfe-Fiske connection one to be anticipated by the entire industry. The presentation of the Fiske plays will be made through the Alco Film Corporation with which Mr. Rolfe's concern is allied.

The Biograph Special

On Wednesday, December 30, "The Biograph Special," a special train consisting of twelve cars, and carrying 125 members of the Biograph producing force, will leave New York for the Los Angeles studios. This change for the winter months means an extraordinary expenditure of money on the part of the Biograph Company, but it means much to the exhibitor also. It means that, for the next six months, Biograph pictures will be produced amid such wonderful settings as are offered by the tropical foliage of southern California, the picturesque scenes of the Rocky Mountains, the great American desert, the mysterious Pacific ocean, and other scenic wonders of the United States that offer suitable backgrounds.

"The Avenging Conscience"

D. W. Griffith's masterpiece "The Avenging Conscience," six reels in length, has been secured by A. M. Eisner of the E. L. K. Feature Film Company, 512 Mallers building, Chicago, for this territory, and bookings are already being taken. The picture is claimed to be Director Griffith's supreme achievement, the story having been suggested by Edgar Allan Poe's story entitled "The Telltale Heart." The feature will be reviewed at greater length in our next week's issue, and an announcement of importance made regarding its opening at a big downtown theater.

Mary Pickford to New York Corporation

That a contract which would make Mary Pickford a star of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, was ready for immediate signing, was the information obtained at the office of the corporation in the Longacre Building as this issue of Motography went to press. Adam Kessell, president, gave his permission to the making of this statement and added that four or five other people of established reputation were expected to sign contracts with the corporation at the same time.

Dorothy Bernard Joins Lubin

Dorothy Bernard, the clever twenty-four year old English girl, has joined the Lubin forces and has been assigned to Barry O'Neil's company. She will play the lead in George Klein's "The District Attorney," which Mr. O'Neil is now making at the Lubin studios in Philadelphia. Miss Bernard was born in South Africa, her father and mother being in one of the first English stock companies to play in Africa. When she was nine years of age Miss Bernard went to Australia with Nance O'Neil's company, then back to San Francisco to the Grand Opera House stock. From there she went to Los Angeles and Portland, playing child parts for the famous old Belasco and Burbank stock companies. At seventeen years of age Miss Bernard was one of the most popular ingenue leading women on the west coast. Later she was in stock with Vaughan Glaser in Detroit, in vaudeville with William Courtleigh, and leading woman for Shubert in "The Ringmaster." For two years she was with the Biograph under the direction of D. W. Griffith. After her Biograph engagement, Miss Bernard went back to the stage at the Columbia theater in Washington, D. C., where she played for two seasons. She has played all variety parts from "Puckers" in "The Prince Chap," to musical comedy and big emotional leading parts.

Vitagraph's New Policy for Coming Year

Beginning Tuesday, January 5, all the Broadway Star features of three reels made by the Vitagraph Company will be released through the regular program of the General Film Company. The releases will be made at the rate of one each week, every alternate Tuesday and every alternate Saturday. The advantage of this change to the exhibitors is obvious and gives them an option on the much desired films.

It was William S. Hart's work as "Cash Hawkins," in "The Squaw Man," that convinced Thomas H. Ince that Hart was the man to star in "gunmen" parts for the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

Film Men's New Year Resolutions

Gathered by Mabel Condon

Harry E. Aitken.

J. Stuart Blackton.

Andrew J. Cobe.

MIDNIGHT, December 31, seems to be the time of all the year when folks pause momentarily in their daily occupations, look hastily back over the accomplishments or shortcomings of the year just ended, and with a desire for better things solemnly lift their hands and make resolutions for the new year.

This year, however, Mabel Condon of MOTOGRAPHY resolved to take time by the forelock and get the resolutions of as many men of filmdom as possible, in advance of the fatal midnight hour of December 31. Appeals, accordingly, were sent to men in every department of the great film industry, asking them to report the nature of the resolutions they would be most likely to make when the proper hour should come. On account of the early press date of MOTOGRAPHY and the fact that many replies were delayed in the mails, the responses which are listed below are not in any sense the total of those received.

Arranged alphabetically the resolutions and their makers are as follows:

HARRY E. AITKEN.

To make the coming year an unprecedented year of prosperity and profit, that the public may see better pictures than ever before, and a greater number of people be attracted to the theaters because of the higher quality of the entertainment provided. ¶To abet the higher admission price because increased competition among manufacturers and a greater cost in picture making have made a higher price a plain necessity, because the public is always willing to pay a little more when it receives a great deal more for its money. ¶To see that motion picture standards continue on the upward grade. Theater conditions are better, the public is more keenly appreciative of good pictures and business conditions promise all that the responsible men in the art could reasonably expect.

* * *

J. STUART BLACKTON.

To promote peace and happiness on earth and to continue to produce the world's best pictures.

* * *

ANDREW J. COBE.

To do all within my power to elevate the motion picture art. To broaden its scope and usefulness; making it not only a means of entertainment, but also a source of help and edification to the spectator. ¶To extend to the exhibitor the hand of co-operation, realizing that our success is measured entirely by the success he enjoys. ¶To place upon the exhibitors' screens pictures of only the highest grade, both in subject and interpretation, being convinced that the determining factor of the exhibitors' success is now, and always will be, the quality of the film he shows. ¶To base all business operations upon the foundation of irreproachable integrity; our statements upon the truth alone and our dealings with all upon honor and fidelity.

Andrew Dougherty.

William Fox

Adam Kessel.

Emil Öffeman.

Siegmund Lubin.

Jesse L. Lasky.

Carl Laemmle.

WILLIAM P. COOPER.

To make the Standard program, to be issued by the Standard Polyscope Corporation, absolutely standard in photographic quality, human interest quality and the quality of moral cleanliness. ¶To see that during 1915 and every year thereafter, the slogan of the Standard Polyscope Corporation shall be "Nothing's too Good for the Exhibitor." ¶To be sure that the Standard Polyscope Corporation lives up to its slogan in every angle of the business.

ANDREW DOUGHERTY.

To give the best photography. ¶To give logical, consistent screen stories. ¶To give an honest service to the exhibitor and to the public.

WILLIAM FOX.

To be regarded as the "Tiffany" of the moving picture business. ¶To get the best and give the best. ¶To make money—and I appreciate that the way to do it is to produce the pictures that get the money. ¶To have the support of the leading theater owners in the country.

* * *

ADAM KESSELL, JR.

To engage for our productions only stars of world-wide reputation and, by securing the rights to the works of some of the best known authors, give our actors and actresses the benefit thereof. ¶To have the actual work of making films done in a plant second to none in the country, and which has been pronounced by experts as the last word in motion picture manufacturing, thereby insuring the highest quality for our brands. ¶To continue as in the past to keep the New York Motion Picture Corporation abreast of the times and up to, if not in the lead of all, that is, to put our brands to the front and make them popular.

CARL LAEMMLE.

To keep ding-donging at the exhibitor for three hundred and sixty-five days more, urging him to raise the price of admission so that his patrons will help him carry the increased burden of expenses that is bound to fall on his shoulders as a result of the terrific increase in the cost of producing pictures fit for the modern market. ¶To make Universal City (near Los Angeles, Cal.) the wonder city of the world; the best equipped place on earth in which to make moving pictures; and I hereby invite every man, woman and child who may read this resolution to visit Universal City any time after the formal opening on the fifteenth of March and see how Universal moving pictures are made. ¶To continue to give all exhibitors the straight inside truth about the moving picture business as fast as I can learn it or foresee it myself; and try to make myself useful to exhibitors whether they

Charles Pathe.

Horace Plimpton.

S. L. Rothapfel.

Walter Hoff Seely.

Lewis J. Selznick.

Adolph Zukor.

happen to be using the Universal program or any other program.

* * *

JESSE L. LASKY.

To make good productions make good money. ¶To do photodramas that are unusual. ¶To save a little time out of every twenty-four hours for eating and sleeping.

SIEGMUND LUBIN.

To urge exhibitors to specialize in pictures, having one house devoted exclusively to comedies, another to dramas, others to sacred pictures, some to lectures and so on. ¶To inspire the exhibitor to run special matinees for children and show in picture form the wonderful fairy stories and other tales that we all loved to either read or have read to us when we were children. ¶To further the important work we are doing, with the assistance of some of the best physicians and surgeons in the country, in scientific research. The modern physician fights disease with every scientific weapon and he has called to his assistance the motion picture camera. This coming year we expect to accomplish a great deal more. Physicians and surgeons come to our studios with all sorts of cases and our cameras officially record these cases which is an immense help to the physicians in particular and humanity in general. ¶To make the time less distant when the motion picture will compete with the oil painting as far as family records are concerned. ¶To live long enough to see the motion picture a greater aid to mankind, not only along entertainment lines, but in making life much more worth living to everyone. And if I can help in this big work I shall be satisfied.

* * *

WALTER MACNAMARA.

To try and beat the box office receipts of "Traffic in Souls" on my next social subject. ¶To see that Walter Macnamara gets a slice of the returns. ¶To go over to Ireland and put on another "Ireland a Nation."

* * *

BY EMILE OFFEMAN.

To make motion picture productions of merit and quality and not the ever-present "ten cent movie." ¶To assist with all the energy in my power the movement for higher admission prices and better goods. ¶To make the already famous brand name of Eclair a synonym for perfect photoplays.

CHARLES PATHE.

To be enabled, either at the beginning of March or in April, to offer, through twenty-five agencies in the United States, a complete and varied program every week. For that purpose I want to group the best producers of negatives filmed with whom I shall have a mutual understanding on the condition that they are willing to make good.

* * *

HORACE G. PLIMPTON.

To make the best one and two-reel pictures in the world, because we believe these are what the public wants. ¶To furnish two or three really funny comedies each week of the kind that theatergoers want. ¶To make our dramas clean and healthy, as they always have been, and each one is going to have a punch.

* * *

W. R. ROTHACKER.

To consistently maintain our 5 years' unbroken record of 100% satisfied customers. ¶To with aggressive sincerity push forward our campaign to swat the lie in moving picture advertising. ¶To investigate and if good, purchase, install and maintain everything new in studio or factory equipment that will make for higher quality in industrial moving pictures.

* * *

To never again judge a picture. ¶To never again say "yes." ¶To never again say "no."

* * *

WALTER HOFF SEELY.

To not call every production a masterpiece or classic. ¶To go on being on the level with the exhibitor. ¶To see that every Alco release will not find the hero and heroine in a Graeco Roman embrace. ¶To be unconventional in that we try to improve upon our best works. ¶To keep our resolutions.

* * *

LEWIS J. SELZNICK.

To not be content until every exhibitor has been educated to realize that his future is absolutely secure when he runs a feature an entire week, but in no event should he show them less than three days. ¶To convince exhibitors that second runs are more valuable to them than first runs. This is a new idea and like new ideas it is apt to be scoffed at. I am willing to go on record that a year from now the idea will be universally applied. ¶To not be satisfied until I have made the World Film Corporation the biggest and most progressive film organization in the world, and further I shall not be content until I have raised the standard of the film business to the highest commercial plane possible.

ADOLPH ZUKOR.

To always tell trade journalists one-half of a story; the other half will be supplied anyhow. ¶To respect every other film concern's policy and efforts; they are backed by confidence and sincerity, and that's half of any battle. ¶To always do only one thing at one time, and sometimes only one thing for more than one time.

A new and interesting method of double exposure has been discovered by William Foster, manager of the laboratories of the Universal west coast studios.

The Life Photo Film Corporation has secured an option on the services of Miss Minnie Dupree, the vaudeville and legitimate star.

Pathe's "The Life of Our Savior"

At a private exhibition, on Monday, December 14, at E. E. Fulton's projection room, Lake street, Chicago, the seven-reel Pathe-Eclectic natural colored film, "The Life of Our Savior," was shown to the trade press and the managers of a number of the more important Chicago houses.

The production is one which is worthy of praise and which, despite the fact that the same subject has been done several times previously, is sure to be popular. The entire seven thousand feet are beautifully colored and at no time does the artistic finish lapse into a gaudy coloring, which is often the case in films of this kind. The backgrounds were selected by a man who knew how to distinguish beauty spots from ordinary scenery and every scene is in itself beautiful.

It was filmed in the Holy Land, amid surroundings which lend an authentic air to the settings. The ancient cities, countrysides and buildings are perfect in detail and the scenes taken in the desert are a rare treat, for they carry the true atmosphere of Egypt. The photography is another asset worth consideration, for the majority of "tricks" known to the average cameraman are attempted and never once do they fail to accomplish their purpose. The fades are handled in a manner that is certain to win applause. It is rather unusual that only one close-up scene appeared throughout, for in a film where camera effects are numerous this is usually resorted to often.

The acting is excellent. The types are well chosen and carry their parts with the air of restraint that a production of this nature requires in order to achieve success. Especially good is the work of the actor playing the part of Christ and of the actress filling the role of Mary. The supernumeraries, who are as plentiful as they have been in all big feature productions imported from Europe, do what is required of them in an intelligent and business-like manner.

The story itself, while it makes no pretense at continuity, becomes highly dramatic toward the close. It proceeds from the birth to the death and resurrection, including the more important events in the life of the Savior and treating each incident in a very convincing manner. Considered both from the artistic and box office points of view, "The Life of Our Savior" is a film worth the attention of any exhibitor.

New Film Company Contemplated

Three of the younger generation of motion picture men are to form a new producing company named "Federal Films Inc." Will Rex, formerly of the Famous Players; Art Busch of the McNamara Features, and Al Ray, of Ramo, are the men referred to.

They contemplate building studios at Hollywood, California, and on the upper west side, New York City, and engaging many famous players for their stock companies. It is the intention of these men to release a program of four and five reel mystery plays based on famous detective novels put into scenario form by Will Rex and other well-known script-writers. Besides these dramas they will put out a single reel comedy each week, featuring Al Ray.

Their first dramatic offering will be directed by Tom Powers, who is now directing for Florence Turner in England, and who formerly was a member of the Vitagraph producing staff.

A Mystery Story

Edwin August has picked his cast for the first picture which he will make for the Kinetophote. As has been announced, his leading woman is Bliss Milford, who has been an Edison star for some time back. The others in the cast will be Clare Hillier, a child actress; Edward J. Peil, Hal August, Thomas J. O'Keefe, Virginia Russell and Emmet Whitney. The picture which Mr. August will produce has been advertised as a "mysterious thing," and from the hints which have been thrown out at the Kinetophote offices on West Forty-sixth street, it is to be one of the queerest productions yet put before the motion picture public. Some ideas are to be tried which have never before been tried in moving pictures and the effects which are promised will be different from anything yet shown on the screen. So much mystery has been thrown around the making of the picture that Mr. August when asked point blank about it said: "Well, it is a mystery picture, so why shouldn't there be mystery thrown around it? However, you may be sure that when the announcement of the title is made there will be some astonished people in the game who will wonder why they have not thought of it before."

Edward J. Peil.

A Picturesque Production

"The Adventures of Gar El Hama," the Great Northern Film Company's latest feature, is an exceptionally picturesque production. It was staged amid the beautiful rugged scenery on the southern coast of Sweden, on the high seas between Denmark and Sweden, and on a deserted island in that vicinity. That section is not surpassed for scenic splendor by any other coast locations in either Europe or America.

Many spectacular and unusual scenes were thus secured. In producing the photoplay, three different kinds of sea-going ships were used, a schooner, a tug and a yacht. Some very realistic and thrilling incidents were enacted on the boats, especially on the yacht.

The title role in the picture is essayed by the well-known Continental dramatic star, A. Hertel.

Chaplin Signs With Essanay

A moment before locking up the forms MOTOGRAPHY was informed that the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago has secured the signature of Charles Chaplin, known from coast to coast as "the funny man of the films," to a contract calling for what is alleged to be the largest salary ever paid a motion picture actor. Mr. Chaplin will begin work in the Chicago studios of the Essanay Company within a week.

CHRISTMAS AND THE YEAR'S END

TO summarize the events of an exceedingly active and fertile year in a few limited lines of type is a task of cold compilation. In its brief and compressed form such a summary can show only results; it cannot convey even a hint of the long hours of intense application, the dreams and the enthusiasms that made the year a big one in our industry—that have made the industry itself big and virile as it has always been.

Just now more than half the world is bending its thoughts to destruction. Even our own country, physically untouched by the general desolation, cannot but sense its depressing influence. Many of its industries cannot find enough work for their men to do. It will be a hard Christmas for some.

But while we find it in our hearts to feel deeply for those who are in distress because of the dearth of employment or the insufficiency of business, and may even surreptitiously give them here and there a little something out of our plenty, we cannot restrain a certain amount of exuberant joy, in this joyous season, that our business is good. For it is good; and we are proving now more than ever that the motion picture business is a good business; a substantial business; an honorable and dignified and especially a prosperous business.

It is no longer permissible to say the motion picture is "still in its infancy." It is in its youth—the glorious, sparkling period when every day brings change and new development; when every new year brings promise of being greater than the old year. Our summary of events reveals, in its necessarily dispassionate style, as busy a fifty-two week period as any industry in the world can show. But between the lines there is promise of a still busier, still more fruitful and prosperous year ahead for everybody in the motion picture business.

FILMOPHOBIA.

WRITING in the Chicago Journal, O. L. Hall claims to detect signs that some of the producers of "legitimate" plays are "still afflicted with filmophobia." They think it necessary, he says, to do something to re-establish popular interest in such stars as have lost their glamour through too wide-spread film distribution. Some of them have firmly announced their intention of avoiding such stars in future casts. But of course they will do no such thing, as Mr. Hall admits. They will go on using the star that fits the part, regardless of his or her film exploitation.

Maybe they have got filmophobia. "Phobias" in general are evidences of mental disease, and the idea that a theatrical personality loses magnetism by being presented on picture theater screens is surely a morbid conclusion. But Mr. Hall tries manfully to justify it in this wise:

The makers and exhibitors of photoplays, as they call them, have a great advantage over the producers of drama and the legitimate exploiters of histrionic talent. You can draw crowds to a picture shop to see the flickering likeness of a player who has made his fame on the stage, but you can not draw into a regular theater a crowd to see a performer who has made his fame in pictures. John Bunny is, or was, the most celebrated of the comic picture actors, but when he returned to the theater a little while ago he quickly declined into a low-price attraction. It is not that Bunny is less of a bore in pictures than he is in the life; it is that he has been seen at every angle for the tenth part of a dollar. The theater creates stars for the motion picture industry, but the motion picture industry creates nothing for the legitimate theaters. Managers were saying a few years ago that the motion picture theater was a training school which was preparing a new public for the standard theater. They now know they were wrong.

He seems to have picked on Bunny deliberately because that jovial picture player has not met with the success on his last trip that he may have anticipated. But there is no evidence that the fact that Bunny gained his reputation in pictures is answerable for his alleged present status as a "low-price attraction." Why not mention Mary Pickford and Crane Wilbur and Paul Panzer and Marie Eline and Pearl Sindelar and other screen stars who have gone from pictures to legitimate or vaudeville and not only scored great successes but at good admission prices? True, they go back to pictures again; but that is because pictures actually have more to offer any good player today than has either the legitimate or the vaudeville stage.

As to the old saying that the pictures were a training school for the legitimate, that was an honest prediction in its day and was believed by all the profession. But it has simply outgrown its usefulness. Mr. Hall and the producers he defends are fearful now that the legitimate is becoming a training school for the picture studio—as indeed it already is.

The exploiting of personalities has long been the chief aim and the greatest success of theatrical producers. It has not been true for years that "the play's the thing." The attraction is not the dramatic value of the play, but the advertised value of the players. Whether this is a good or a bad condition we will not discuss now; but it is certainly responsible for any epidemic of filmophobia that may exist among producers.

Nevertheless, their argument defeats itself. If it is personality the public seeks, not playing, it will still willingly pay its two dollars for a look at its favorite talent. With all our worship for the film, the film player on the screen is a picture, not a personality. This is not saying that the picture is not just as attractive as the personality, at least to a normal mind. But the fact remains that so long as the producers persist in featuring and advertising persons rather than plays, the people will continue to pay to see those persons in real life. And when they want good playing they will go to the pictures.

PLAYLET ON VITAGRAPH BILL.

A playlet again occupies a place on the Vitagraph theater program, but this time it is not pantomime. Sidney Drew is the main character in "What the Moon Saw," and S. Rankin Drew, the author of the one-act drama, Jane Morrow, Edwina Robbins, Paul Scarden, and J. Herbert Frank make up the supporting cast.

A one-reel comedy, "The Egyptian Mummy," heads the bill beginning Sunday, December 13, and is followed by a two-part drama, "Out of the Past," that is somewhat above the average program release. Another one-reel picture, "A Question of Clothes," and the Mezzanotte Trio precede the personal appearance of Mr. Drew and company, and a three-reel picture of the Broadway Star Feature Company brand, "Underneath the Paint," completes the bill.

The latter play, as its title suggests, is a vivid picturization of the misery and sorrows that occupy a prominent place in the private life of an actress, and which are outwardly transformed into smiles and expressions of joy with the donning of grease paint. Helen Gardner and Gladden James play the principal parts in "Underneath the Paint," which was written and produced by Charles L. Gaskill. C. R. C.

Paid your war tax yet?

Down at the Philadelphia exhibitors' ball, we understand they auctioned off a picture of Clara Kimball Young for the Belgian Relief Fund and that Siegmund Lubin and Carl Laemmle, clubbing together, paid over $50 for it. Gee, it must have taken a Solomon to determine who the picture belonged to! The P. A. forgot to say whether it was "Pop" or Carl who bore it away in triumph. Doubtless, though, Laemmle Luck brought Carl out the winner.

Edison Offers Story of Civic Graft

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

MARY IMLAY TAYLOR has visualized a very simple but attractive story in "The Magnet of Paradise," and the manner in which it is interpreted by a capable cast of Edison players does it full justice. It is odd that one should feel especially interested in a story just because the grown-up, refined characters in it were companions in "the days of real sport," when a dirty face, torn stocking, or hunger-prompted raid upon an apple orchard, followed by unceremonious flight, were items of daily occurrence. But such is the case, at least in this picture, for it supplies the human-interest element, and puts punch and significance into situations that would ordinarily be commonplace.

Augustus Phillips plays the leading role as Hugh Holland, the young lawyer whose appointment to the office of district attorney places him in the unenviable position of indicting a man who has known him since his boyhood days. Gertrude Dallas has a most melancholy and emotional part as Betty Callander, the girl that is drawn by two loves that are opposed to each other. Robert Brower and Frank McGlynn enact the "heavy" impersonations, though of the two Mr. McGlynn is the most villainous. Mr. Brower is an excellent type for the role assigned him. The big scenes are well handled, realistic in their action, and convincing in the numbers employed.

At the beginning of the story the deep-rooted love and pleasing familiarity existing between Betty Callander and Hugh Holland is explained by the visualization of one of their reminiscence-chats in which we learn that the two were playmates in their youth in the country town of Paradise. Five years have elapsed since their last meeting, and Hugh is now a lawyer with a wide reputation for integrity and a consequent appointment to the chair of district attorney in Paradise to fill the vacancy brought about by the past district attorney's committing suicide.

Before Holland leaves to take up his new work Callander sends for him and attempts to bribe him to forget the impending investigation of the workings of the Traction Company of which he is president, but Holland refuses, tearing in half the check offered him. Finlaison, Callander's right-hand man, pastes the two pieces together and suggests that they show the check to the newspapers as evidence that Holland has accepted the bribe. The plan is successful, and the next day the papers are full of the account of how the new district attorney has already fallen off of his virtuous pedestal.

Shortly afterwards Finlaison approaches Betty, and begs her to marry him. She turns on the man and accuses him of having trumped up the charge against her lover. He confesses and then tells her that her father is powerless in his grasp. The story with which he supports his statement astounds Betty. It seems that a short time prior to his death the district attorney of Paradise had everything prepared to expose the Traction Company. Callander tried to bribe him out of it, and when he refused to accept the money, shot him. Finlaison was the only witness to the crime.

Looking through his predecessor's unfinished business, Holland finds the evidence that, presented in court, will seal the Traction Company's doom. Betty calls on him, learns of his find, and pleads with him to give up the fight against the corporation. He defers answering, and that night attends a meeting to speak against trusts. Finlaison shoots him as he rises to take the platform, and only the quick action of the constables save the man from a lynching. In the meantime Callander succumbs to heart failure, brought on partly by fear of the knowledge that Holland can put him in prison and partly by the agony of knowing that his daughter Betty is aware of his share in the late district attorney's death.

Holland recovers and his first official act is to burn up the incriminating evidence against the Traction Company, the body of the commercial octopus now being out of the way. The lifelong romance between him and Betty culminates in their marriage.

Zudora's Fifth Adventure Exciting

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

As the "Zudora" series continues one is forced to admire more and more the acting of James Cruze and Marguerite Snow, who appear in the leading roles. In episode five, entitled "The Perpetual Scene from Episode 5 of "Zudora".

Glare," which will be released on Monday, December 21, Mr. Cruze's portrayal of the character of Hassan Ali is especially worthy of praise. Although there are only a few dramatic moments in the play, he utilizes every one of them to the best possible advantage. Miss Snow excels in the title role whenever she is called upon to carry the action forward.

This episode is worthy of consideration as a two-reel production, aside from the fact that it is part of the well-known series. It is composed of a series of interesting incidents and leads up to an exciting climax, which is preceded by a strong element of suspense. A hill is mined by Zudora's uncle and John Storm is walking upon it when the fuse is lighted. Cut backs are used effectively, showing the detective heroine racing toward her lover and the burning fuse creeping toward the explosives, alternately. She arrives in time, however, and just as she leads Storm from his danger the mine explodes. There is no mere puff of smoke in this, but, on the contrary, it is one of the most realistic explosions this reviewer has seen for several months.

The plot, as has been the custom in the series, hinges upon a mystery which Zudora must solve, but it is in some places rather vague and there seem to be some motives missing. This fact will undoubtedly be covered up by the action, however, and the two reels will easily serve the purpose of satisfying a patron and drawing him back to see the ensuing installments.

The story opens with a visit of two of Hassan Ali's confederates to his apartments. He pays them in advance for their services and then instructs them to use their invention, a powerful machine which absorbs and sends out the rays of the sun, for his purposes. Zudora enters the mystic room while they are talking and Hassan Ali surprises the confederates by telling the girl that his friends have lost a valuable gem and that her next mystery will be the finding of it. The confederates leave and when he is alone with the girl Hassan Ali's hate for her almost overcomes him but he controls himself before she notices him.

A few days later she visits the confederates' hut in the woods and is told that the gem must be some place in the vicinity, as they have been instructed by her uncle to do away with her. She starts her search, when suddenly a paper which she is holding in her hand bursts into flame. Frightened, she returns home and tells Hassan Ali, but he laughs at her. The next day she returns with John Storm and again the invisible cause of the flame frightens her. Storm be-

Storm suspects Hassan Ali of being implicated in the plot more than ever when both he and Zudora are made prisoners by the confederates when they visit the hut the following day. Again they escape and the next time Storm visits the woods he goes alone. Hassan Ali determines to rid himself of Zudora's lover and mines the hillside on which the machine is situated. Storm finds the machine and demolishes it, but, while he is engaged in doing this, Hassan Ali sets off the fuse. Zudora learns of her lover's peril and rushes toward the place in a buggy. She arrives a moment before the explosion and leads Storm to safety.

Thumbprint Evidence in American Film

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

A RURAL mystery, which has to do with the death of an old miser and the possibility that any one of three men might have been responsible for his death, lends interest to "The Sower Reaps," which is a two reel release of the American Film Manufacturing Company for Monday, December 21.

Jack Richardson, Vivian Rich, William Garwood and Reaves Eason are the characters about whom the story revolves, and all of them splendidly impersonate the types they are expected to represent. Photographically the picture is fully up to the standard for which the American is famous and the tinting in several of the scenes is alone worthy of comment.

The old miser blackmails the lawyer.

As the story opens, Peter Pelham, district attorney, learns with surprise that Ben Rolfe, the schoolmaster, has been selected by the reformers of the town to run against him for the office of district attorney at the coming election. Pelham straightway summons Rolfe to his office and there makes him an offer of money to withdraw from the campaign. Needless to say, Rolfe indignantly refuses and as he is about to leave, notes that old miser Pike is a caller on Pelham. Pelham, it seems, had years before bribed a jury with money given him by Pike and ever since that time Pike had been blackmailing him at frequent intervals.

Rolfe has a dissipated young brother, Tim, with whom he starts for home that same afternoon, Tim being in such a condition that he is unable to walk alone. Cutting across a meadow the two come upon Laurel, old Pike's daughter, and Ben stops to chat with her.

Tim, left alone, sees old Pike leaving his humble home to totter up to the ruins of an old mill near by, and instantly jumps to the conclusion that it is there that old Pike conceals his money, and drunkenly determines to follow and spy upon him.

It soon develops that Pike had gone to add to his fortune of hidden wealth and Tim surprises him, and quickly overpowers and robs him. Pelham, meanwhile, taking a short cut to his home, chances to pass near the mill and Pike, surviving the blow struck by Tim, staggers out into the open just in time to see Pelham and, supposing it to be he who had struck him down, he draws a revolver and attempts to shoot the man he believes has assaulted him. Pelham, in self-defense, wrests the revolver from him and fires to kill.

Laurel and Ben, hearing the shot, go to investigate and on the way to the scene meet Tim, who confesses his shameful crime and returns the gold to Laurel. Further along Ben finds the pistol which Pelham had flung away and notes that its handle bears the thumb-prints of someone. Wrapping the pistol in his handkerchief Ben preserves the thumb-print and pistol as evidence.

Meanwhile Pelham has returned to the scene and finding Ben and Laurel there seeks to divert suspicion to Ben. His clasp on Ben's wrist leaves a smutty thumb-print and when Laurel discovers a bullet hole in Pelham's coat Ben, determined to save Tim and recalling the scene in Pelham's office when old Pike had appeared, accuses Pelham of being the murderer.

Ben hastens away from the scene to compare the smutty thumb-print on his wrist with that on the handle of the revolver. Pelham, meanwhile, finding

The thumb-print evidence submitted.

Tim's hat near the scene of the crime, has Tim arrested and arraigned at the coroner's inquest.

When Ben presents his evidence, however, displaying the thumb-print on the revolver and giving testimony as to the print left on his wrist, Pelham breaks down and confesses that it was he who shot the miser, though he pleads self-defense. Realizing that he cannot hope to win at the coming election, Pelham, with his wife, leaves town to begin life anew in another place, while Ben seems sure of winning both the election and the hand of Laurel. The cast is as follows:

Peter Pelham, district attorney.....Jack Richardson
His wife.....Louise Lester
Old Miser Pike.....Harry Von Meter
Laurel, his daughter.....Vivian Rich
Ben Rolfe, the schoolmaster.....Wm. Garwood
Tim, his younger brother.....Reaves Eason

Police official.....Chick Morrison

Cummings Joins American

Irving Cummings, former star of the Thanhouser company, for some time leading man of the Reliance company, and in the old days at the head of a Champion company, recently was induced to sign an American contract and left immediately for Santa Barbara, California, where it is understood he is to play the leading male roles in the productions staged by the first American company. Mr. Cummings thus becomes the successor of William Garwood, Sydney Ayres and Warren Kerrigan, and will undoubtedly be strongly featured in dramas calling for an emotional lead. Congratulations are extended both to Mr. Cummings and the American company.

"As Ye Sow" A Strong Production

Those whom the rain kept away from the Playhouse in New York City on Sunday night, December 13, missed seeing a feature that would have more than recompensed them for the discomfiture suffered en route. It is seldom that one sees a performance as delightful and gratifying as that given by Alice Brady in "As Ye Sow," a William A. Brady five-part picture released through the World Film Corporation. Miss Brady's gowns were wonderful and plentiful in number, and she fully looked the part of the millionaire's daughter, a fact which, sorry to relate, is not true of all leading women who play such parts.

The action takes place in and about Cape Cod, and the rugged coast line and inland towns of Massachusetts furnishes the settings for a number of the outdoor scenes. The photography is restful and clear. Especially good are the scenes in which the fishing schooner is seen battering itself to pieces on the rocks off of the cape. A sensational climax is reached in the villain's battle for life with another man on the edge of a steep cliff, towering above the sea, the figures standing out in bold relief against the sky.

The story is of a ne'er-do-well who obtains a position as chauffeur for a wealthy family, and induces the millionaire's daughter to elope with him. After their child's birth the girl banishes the brute from the house. He returns, steals the baby, leaves it on his mother's doorstep, and goes to sea. A few years afterwards the young wife moves to the neighboring village and unknowingly boards at her husband's home. She and the child become great friends. A shipwreck off of the cape brings the ne'er-do-well home. With the exception of learning that her child friend is her own baby, the poor wife gains nothing but misery by his return. The brute is killed in a fight with one of his former boon companions, and the girl is left free to marry his brother, whom she loves as much as she despised her husband.

Mina Films Released

The long heralded comedies known as Mina films will make their first apearance on the General Film program this week. The first release, "The Thrilling Adventures of Count Verace," is on the licensed schedule for December 17, this picture being directed by Milton Fahrney and having for its leading woman Mlle. Valkyrine, the noted Danish film favorite. It is said to be the first American single reel subject to employ a great European star. It will be remembered that this new member of the licensed group was originally announced as "Ace," which was soon withdrawn and that the brand name was finally chosen by an open competition for a prize of $250.00. Out of eleven hundred answers "Mina," the suggestion of the well known newspaper humorist and photoplaywright, Roy L. McCardell, was chosen. The component letters of Mina stand for Made in America which furnishes the first application on record of the national slogan to motion pictures.

It is now a well known fact that short comedies have become through public demand an absolute necessity to exhibitors and it was to fill this demand with a product which could be relied upon to sustain a set standard of quality week in, week out, that Mina films were conceived. For the present the releases are to be made once a week on Thursdays, with additions being made from month to month until three a week are being released. The list will include an advanced series of animal pictures in which the Bostock animals will be featured. This collection is said to be the largest and most famous aggregation of trained wild beasts in the world. Twelve of the original trainers and Harry E. Tudor, who has managed the show for ten years, were engaged to handle the famous jungle performers.

Harry LaPearl, the leading American clown, who formerly headed the Barnum & Bailey and New York Hippodrome funmakers is appearing in a serial which burlesques the melodramatic serials now so popular in picture theaters and magazine sections of the various newspapers. Harry Palmer, author of the newspaper comic "Babbling Bess" and a prominent war correspondent, is preparing a series of cartoon pictures. Mr. Palmer went to the scene of war to obtain sketches for his first subject, "The Siege of Liege," which has been announced for release December 31.

Perhaps the most remarkable feature of the whole layout will be trick comedies made with a camera just invented by David Horsley and which will be used for the first time in Mina films. This camera makes two exposures on the negative with one turn of the crank, thus allowing marvelous effects which have never before been possible, and it is claimed that first showing of the pictures made with this magic box will be a revelation to the oldtimers of the industry.

"Million Dollar Mystery" fans will have an opportunity to see two of their favorites, Flo La Badie and Sidney Bracy, in "Craft vs. Love," a forthcoming Thanhouser two-reel release.

Prominent Vitagraph Star

Beautiful, talented and of wonderfully convincing dramatic power, Miss Helen Gardner occupies a prominent position in the motion picture art. After graduating from the Sargent Dramatic School, Miss Gardner appeared in several classical pantomimic dramas, but recognizing in the picture play a field in which her highest ideals might be attained, she refused several flattering offers to continue her work behind the footlights, and accepted an offer to become a member of the Vitagraph players. After a short absence from this company, during which she appeared in special features, among which were "Cleopatra," "A Princess of Bagdad" and "A Daughter of Pan," Miss Gardner returned to the Vitagraph Company and is featured in all of the plays written by Charles L. Gaskill. Miss Gardner has done more than play the parts assigned to her. She has made a thorough study of the art of silent expression, and has acquired a knowledge of its subtleties, that is evidenced in all of her characterizations. Each character she portrays is a creation with a personality all its own. In the opinion of many she is herself only off the screen; on it, she is the personification of the being conceived in the mind of the author.

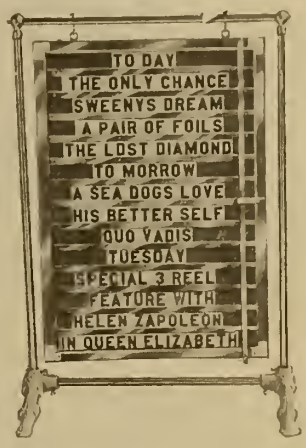
"Pruning the Movies" A Scream



In "Pruning the Movies," the Nestor comedy to be released on Friday, January 1, the Universal takes a sly slap at the local boards of Censorship which have sprung up all over the country. Not content with the censorship of the National Board these censors, composed of local Anthony Comstocks, mutilate an innocent film beyond all recognition, the process showing the "before and after" effects being a side-splitting one. The film illustrates how titles are changed and scenes retaken, and will give the motion picture theatergoer an excellent idea of the way in which self-appointed boards of out-of-work busybodies can work injury to the motion picture industry. The picture uses that most potent of all measures, ridicule, to drive home the point in which everyone in the motion picture business is interested. From start to finish the picture is chock full of laughs and clever character drawing.

Secure Rights to "Bella Donna"

The Famous Players' Film Company will shortly begin an elaborate film production of the world-famed dramatic masterpiece, "Bella Donna," by Robert Hichens, in which Pauline Frederick will be presented in the title role. Miss Frederick and an exceptionally chosen supporting company will be sent to Florida for the exteriors of this noted subject, the atmospheric and geographical conditions of the Southern Atlantic coast being ideally suited for the environment of the play. The film version will be produced under the direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford.

Newman's New Frame

The Newman Manufacturing Company., Cincinnati, Ohio, with branch factories at 108 West Lake street, Chicago, Ill., and 101 Fourth avenue, New York city, which manufactures a large and complete line of brass poster frames, easels, railings, ticket choppers and theater fixtures of every description, has just put on the market an attractive brass easel poster frame, which is something exceedingly attractive, and at the same time a money maker. This poster frame displays a one sheet poster in the center, and surrounding this are various compartments in which eight advertising cards can be inserted. These advertising cards bring a revenue of $1.50 per week each, and the advertisements can be taken from stores in the vicinity, or from national advertisers. The Newman Manufacturing Company will be glad to send more complete literature pertaining to this, as well as its complete catalog of other theater fixtures, upon request.

Newman's Frame.

"Zudora" Published as a Song

"Zudora" is being heralded, not only as a film and serial story but also as a song. F. J. A. Forster, a Chicago music publisher, has paid $25,000 to J. R. Shannon, the well known song-writer, for the words and music of the piece and is at present busy popularizing it.

Its success seems certain for the music is catchy and the words appealing. It will doubtless be used by many exhibitors as an accompaniment for the "Zudora" pictures. The cover of sheet presents Marguerite Snow's picture, together with the word "Zudora," containing the "Z" figure which is being used as a trade mark.

Should it become one of the popular pieces of the day it would indeed be an excellent advertisement for both the film and the story, and Miss Snow, the dainty detective, will be even more endeared to the hearts of her many followers through it.

Power's Safety Appliances

The Nicholas Power Company, manufacturers of Power's Cameragraph projection machines, has a booth at the Second International Exposition of Sanitation and Safety, held at the Grand Central Palace, New York City, December 12 to 19, inclusive. The Power Company demonstrates the safety appliances of its machines in a specially constructed theater on the third floor, where the current releases of the various film companies are shown from 2 p. m. until 10.30 p. m. each day.

Recent Patents in Motography

By David S. Hulfish

No. 1,065,135. For an Improved Indicating Leader for Film Strips. Issued to E. A. Ivatts, Paris, France, assignor to Pathe Freres, Paris, France.

The invention is for the purpose of enabling an unskilled operator to thread up a machine correctly for home exhibitions or educational exhibitions where a skilled operator may not be available.

The leader is provided with colored sections and is threaded with the proper colors upon the sprockets, in the film gate, etc. A proper threading up, with proper loops, etc., thus is insured, even in unskilled hands.

No. 1,065,141. For an Improved Carbon for Projecting Lamps. Issued to John F. Kerlin, Lakewood, Fig. 1,065,141.

Ohio, assignor to National Carbon Co., Cleveland, Ohio.

The carbon rod of invention is particularly adapted for motion picture projecting lanterns, as it holds the arc upon one side of the carbon. The carbon has a groove upon the side, the groove being formed with round bottom to avoid cracking through to the core when baking.

No. 1,065,576. For a New Type of Apparatus for Synchronizing Motion Pictures and Sound Reproductions. Issued to Edward H. Amet, Redondo Beach, Calif.

In the illustrations is shown a motion picture film having guide holes labeled 50, 50 and 50'. In the projecting machine, an air tube blows a jet of air against the film as it passes in being projected and whenever one of the guide holes 50 stops momentarily before the jet of air the air current blows through the guide hole and operates a small diaphragm placed upon the further side of the film. This diaphragm in turn operates an electric switch or contact point and by an ingenious arrangement of step-by-step ratchet relay and magnetic clutch the phonograph record is started and stopped as required by the action of the picture, and successive phonograph records are started at the proper times where the length of the picture film requires more than one such record.

There are nine claims, from which two are selected:

1. The combination with a motion picture machine provided with a ribbon, of pneumatic means to apply pneumatic pressure to one side of the ribbon; said ribbon being provided with perforations; a diaphragm arranged to be operated by pressure passing through such perforations; an electric circuit opened and closed by operation of said diaphragm; an electro-magnet in said circuit; an armature actuated by said electro-magnet; a sound reproducing machine; mechanism driven by the motion picture machine to operate the sound reproducing machine; and means controlled through said armature for operatively connecting and disconnecting the sound reproducing machine with said mechanism.

7. In a motion picture and sound reproducing apparatus, the combination with a motion picture ribbon having holes, of means for supplying air pressure, a sound producing machine and electro-pneumatic means operated by the passage of air under pressure through said holes, for the purpose of starting and stopping the sound-producing machine in synchronism with said motion picture ribbon.

No. 1,065,756. For an Improved Cabinet Stand for Picture Projecting. Issued to Frank T. Wilson, Stillwater, Minn.

The rheostats and controlling switches are arranged upon the inside face of a door which when closed has the apparatus inside the cabinet, holding it safe from accidental injury. When in use, the door is kept open and swings to such a position as to render the switches convenient for use and to afford full ventilation for the rheostats.

No. 1,066,765. For a Trick Lantern Slide. Issued to Alexander S. Spiegel, Chicago, Ill., assignor of part to Robert Glendenning, Chicago, Ill.

The lantern slide comprises two plates. One of the plates is a screen of alternate transparent lines and opaque lines. The other plate contains a picture limited to one set of lines matching the opaque lines of the screen plate when the picture is not to be seen, and movable to match with the transparent lines of the screen plate when the picture is to be seen.

No. 1,066,766. For Apparatus Adapted to Make Lantern Slides Having a Form of "Motion Picture" Effect. Issued to Alexander S. Spiegel, Chicago, Ill., assignor of part to Robert Glendenning, Chicago, Ill.

This patent is for an amplification of the application of the foregoing patent, No. 1,066,765, and this patent provides for producing several pictures upon a single plate and for showing them successively through the transparent lines of the screw plates.

A Neat Program

Motography is in receipt of Vol. 1, No. 1, of the American Photoplay Weekly, a nifty little sixteen-page program issued weekly by the Liberty Theater Company of Salt Lake City, Utah, devoted to the coming productions at the American and Liberty theaters, which are controlled by the Liberty Theater Company. H. A. Sims is manager of the periodical, A. S. Hatfield, editor, and H. L. Knappen, advertising manager. All are to be complimented upon the neat little booklet they are issuing and the photoplay patrons of Salt Lake City should not lack for information concerning the picture plays they are to see. The American theater opens daily at 2 p. m. and runs continuously until 11 at night. It has 1,700 seats at ten cents, 800 at five cents, 300 loges at twenty cents and 200 loges at fifteen cents. The Liberty operates from 2 to 5 p. m. and from 7 to 11, and charges an admission of ten cents to adults and five cents to children under twelve.

Reel Fellows' Costume Ball

Preliminary arrangements are being made by the executive committee of the Reel Fellows' Club for a monster costume ball which will be housed in Chicago's largest auditorium for such affairs. The initial plans as drawn up by the reigning officers will establish this event as the first of its kind ever held in the big middle west metropolis.

The creative genius of the many scenic artists associated with the various motion picture studios in and about Chicago will be employed to give the ball a picturesque enclosure. Many of the noted artists with their famous character portrayals will have their booths so constructed as to represent some familiar scene in a big production in which they have taken part.

All this is working toward the establishment of permanent quarters for the Reel Fellows' Club, which has had an astounding growth since its inception some months ago. The membership is such that it represents every branch of the industry. While it would be possible to go ahead with club rooms without a benefit ball, it is felt that such quarters would be far too small within six months, judged by the club's present rapid growth. A special publicity committee has been appointed which will work toward getting news notes in the various trade papers and the daily papers in and about Chicago. Committees have been appointed consisting of men who are experienced in the various duties that have been entrusted to them. The executive committee consists of Warren A. Patrick, R. R. Nehls, Charles Nixon, Omer F. Doud, L. A. Boening, W. R. Rothacker and C. J. VerHalen. The arrangement committee is Walter Early, Neil Caward, Frank Hough, R. C. Travers and Rapley Holmes. Charles Andress is chairman of the publicity and program committee and is assisted by Walter Hildreth, Fred Wagner, E. O. Blackburn and C. J. VerHalen. The entertainment committee consists of W. R. Rothacker, N. Sawyer, O. F. Spahr, O. F. Doud and E. J. Hickey. The refreshment committee is composed of Tom Quill, J. W. Brickhouse and George A. Berg.

At the next regular meeting of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago, which will be held at the Hotel Sherman in the Italian Room on Wednesday evening, December 16, the gathering will be addressed by Mr. Blair of the Eastman Company. His subject will be "Raw Stock." At each future meeting the club will be addressed by some representative person in the motion picture business on the branch of the business he represents.

For the present the headquarters of the Reel Fellows' Club will be Suite 505, Ashland block, and all the officers of the organization will use this address.

Brevities of the Business

William H. Wright, who has put his likeable personality into the management of the company which makes Excelsior films, is engaged otherwise and also, as financial expert for the wall-paper firm of W. H. S. Lloys, one of the best and biggest in New York. Its offices are directly across the street from the World Tower building, in which the Excelsior offices have space, and when Mr. Wright can't be found in one of these places, he can be in the other. Born in Lockport, N. Y., he attended school in Buffalo and secured his first "job" there, in a department store. Then he went into the financial department of the Buffalo Evening News and there met W. A. Williams, whose brother-in-law he now is. W. A. Williams deserted newspapers for the stage and, becoming a picture player, interested Mr. Wright in assuming part of the Excelsior management. That was last May. Harry Handworth is president of the company, Mr. Williams vice-president and Mr. Wright secretary. A keen man of business and a believer in honor and honesty, Mr. Wright's dealings with others are of the kind on which all businesses should be founded. You feel, instinctively, that Mr. Wright's statements are based on facts and anything not supposed to be repeated is not told by him. He has the general liking of those of the film industry who have occasion to meet him. "Wright is right" is a current opinion regarding William Henry Wright.

Fred (Wid) Gunning, formerly of Warners' and later with the Sid Olcott Players, is conducting the Saturday motion picture page on the Evening Mail.

Harry E. Aitken, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, has called in the services of Philip Mindil, publicity specialist, to act in an advisory capacity for "Runaway June," the new George Randolph Chester serial which the Reliance is about to put out. Mindil organized the elaborate publicity department of the Mutual and is now conducting a general publicity bureau in the Times Building. The Reliance will require a large portion of his time from now on.

A special showing of the Kleine five part features, "Officer 666," was given Tuesday morning at the Candler theater. George Kleine, William Selig, George K. Spoor and J. A. Berst were among those present.

Director Charles M. Seay, Edison, with Bessie Learn, Marie Le Manna and Mrs. William Bechtel, has been in Washington and North Carolina for some time filming scenes for a new play of the South.

Full credit is given by William D. Taylor, director for the Favorite Players, to Homer Scott, the star cameraman of that company. Scott's excellent work in "The Key to Yesterday" and "The Man Who Could Not Lose" placed him in the front rank of motion picture photographers.

Little Audrey Berry of the Vitagraph players is a firm believer in Santa Claus, her only doubt about him being as to whether he comes in a sleigh drawn by reindeers or in an automobile. Not long since, Little Miss Berry, with some hundred other children, visited one of the big department stores in order to get a glimpse of and shake hands with Santa. "Santa" was a screen fan and when he recognized her, little Audrey was certain she would be remembered on Christmas.

Arthur S. Kane, assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation, is away from New York on a two weeks' business trip. His itinerary will bring him to Philadelphia, Washington, Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas. From there he is not certain which way he will travel, but he will make a careful study of conditions in each of the cities mentioned, giving special attention to conditions in the feature field.

Ira M. Lowry, general manager of the Lubin Company, who for the past six weeks has been on a trip to the Pacific coast, has returned to the home plant. Mr. Lowry gives glowing accounts of the beauties of California and the wonderful development of the Lubin Los Angeles studio. The trip was a combination of business and pleasure, but Mr. Lowry declares it was all pleasure

Gertrude McCoy has received a number of commendatory letters from clergymen who were invited to a studio showing of Edison's "The Birth of Our Saviour," released December 19. In that film Miss McCoy appears as the Virgin Mary and the ministers are warm in their praise of what they term "a highly spiritual portrayal of a difficult character to depict."

The Christmas fund benefit given by the Vitagraph Company at the vitagraph theater Wednesday evening, December 9, in which the worthy poor of New York will participate on Christmas day, was one of the most unique entertainments ever given by a motion picture company, and, besides netting $1,106, was a decided artistic success.

William Weiss and Max Levey, roadmen out of the Chicago World Film Corporation offices, had very successful trips and report the general outlook for the future very encouraging.

Sally Crute's winning ways get beyond the screen for, like a scalp, she dangles these days on her wrist a silver mesh bag which she won last Saturday night at the Hotel Endicott, New York City, in a dancing contest.

World Film Corporation.——The stock of this company is being traded in very actively every day on the New York curb at the rate of between 1,000 and 2,000 shares. The market eased off last week and most of the trading now is between 5½ and 5⅞.

Thanhouser Syndicate (Zudora) has secured contracts aggregating over $670,000. In an attempt to reach a conclusion as to the ultimate bookings, the only parallel afforded is that of the Syndicate Film (producers of the "Million Dollar Mystery"), whose net bookings were approximately $150,000 less than "Zudora" in the same length of time. The $10,000 offer freely advertised on the back pages of the Tribune and a number of the metropolitan dailies, had an immediate effect and sales of the common stock have been made at higher than 80. The effect of combining the American Film, Thanhouser Film, Chicago Tribune and a syndicate of newspapers for a successor to Zudora was a strategical stroke, the significance of which will not be seen at first glance, but it means very definitely that the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation falls heir to a strong combination that will bring in additional receipts.

Reliance—There have been practically no transfers in this stock since the recent sale of a block of approximately 400 shares at 30.

There has been some demand for stock of a new local company called the United Photoplays Company, which is based on exploiting films taken by Dr. Dorsey of the Field Columbian Museum of Chicago. The pictures at the outset, at least, will be mainly those taken in the Orient, and the object of the films will be of a distinctly educational nature. The plant will be located at Wilmette, Ill., and in the company are a former director of the Essanay—H. W. Webster—and the former scenario editor of the Selig Polyscope Company—K. D. Langley.

New York Motion Picture—It is reported that the directors in their December meeting took no action on the resumption of dividends. This column has consistently adhered to the belief that no action will be taken until January.

The Jones, Linick and Shaefer big State street house, the Orpheum, in Chicago, is to be devoted to World Film features once a week. Every Sunday, with an electric sign and a banner that can be seen a mile away, the Orpheum announces the attraction. The deal was negotiated by R. H. Fox of the World Film office and Mr. Moore representing the Jones, Linick & Shaefer interests.

An explosion which tears down the whole mountain side and completely buries a mining town under tons of rock and dirt is one of the spectacular features in a forthcoming five-reel Lubin drama, "The Valley of Lost Hope," produced by Romaine Fielding at Betzwood, Philadelphia. One ton of dynamite was distributed in the hill, which lay directly over a small valley, wherein had been constructed a miniature mining town. When the fuse was lighted eight cameras were turned upon the scene, four of which were motor driven.

Richard Tucker, who recently returned to leads in the Edison, from the American theater stock company in Philadelphia, is showing a huge basket of fruit sent him by the girls he left behind. Mr. Tucker will be the guest of honor at the Regent theater, Rochester, N. Y., December 26, holding a reception for the fans.

In celebration of the death of "Owen" and the blissful future that lies before Harry and Pauline, P. A. Parsons entertained a few of the reviewers who have "periled with Pauline" since the beginning of the serial at a luncheon at Shanley's restaurant. Parsons says (not in the official capacity of a press agent, so it must be so) that the Eclectic Film Company is booking more prints right now on "The Perils of Pauline" than it did while the serial was in its infancy.

The week's best story is on Elmer McGovern, publicity manager for the New York Motion Picture Company. Coming from luncheon Friday afternoon with a friend, Mr. McGovern was responsible for the statement, "Just naturally, I'm a grafter without making an effort to be. Things come to me." The toe of his right shoe struck something hard and, looking down, he saw a tissue-paper wrapped parcel, which he investigated, and into his palm fell a handful of false teeth. Though it was to laugh, Mr. McGovern didn't. Instead, he rewrapped the parcel and, looking up at the Forty-second street building in front of which he made the find, discovered a dentist's sign. "Yours?" he asked of a busy dentist, who claimed no knowledge of the ownership. There being no other dentist's sign in sight, he to whom things just come took the parcel back to the office with him. Anyone claiming the teeth may have them—and with Mr. McGovern's thanks.

E. H. Calvert, who takes the leading part in Essanay's photoplay, "The Crimson Wing," was hurled headlong from his horse when taking a scene on the Chatfield-Taylor estate in Chicago. The horse shied and pitched Calvert over its head down a ravine. Calvert's wrist was sprained and his knee wrenched but despite the pain he continued to direct the players.

The United Film Service has established a branch office in Toledo, O., located at 413 Summit street. Bert Diener is in charge. This brings the list of United Film Service exchanges up to forty-three.

"The Alarm of Angelon," put on by the "Flying A" under direction of Henry Otto, is a colorful one-reel drama, featuring George Field as Angelon, a poor Italian emigrant. Mr. Field's impersonation of Italian characters shows a keen appreciation of racial traits.

William Wadsworth and Arthur Housman, the droll comedy pair, are asking fellow players their opinion as to whether they were insulted or complimented when at a recent ball in Boston, they were told, "You two look just as funny in evening clothes as you do in your character clothes in the plays."

Pauline Bush of Universal is again appearing in a western character, this time in "Where the Forest Ends." Joseph De Grasse is taking a character role as well as directing. William Dowlan and Lon Chaney are also in the cast.

Among the authors whose works have been and are being filmed by the Selig Polyscope Company, are some of the best known and highest priced writers in the world, such as: Edwin Balmer, Amelia E. Barr, Rex Beach, Robert Ames Bennett, B. M. Bower, Cyrus Townsend Brady, Gellette Burgess, Winston Churchill, James Oliver Curwood, Leona Dalrymple, Richard Harding Davis, Anna Katherine Green, Zane Grey, O. Henry, Harrison Jewell Holt, Arthur Hornblow, Will M. Hough, Frederic S. Isham, Maibelle Heikes Justice, Alvah Milton Kerr, General Charles King, Harold MacGrath, Roy L. McCardell, John A. Moroso, E. Phillips Oppenheim, Randall Parrish, Sir Gilbert Parker, William MacLeod Raine, Opie Reade, James Whitcomb Riley, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Hallie Erminie Rives, Mollie Elliott Sewell, Bertrand W. Sinclair, Louis Tracy, Onota Watanna, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and Gilson Willets.

J. P. McGowan, who was directing and taking the "heavy" lead in "The Hazards of Helen," series is still in the Sisters' Hospital, Los Angeles. On the day he fell from a telegraph pole and fractured his pelvis bone, his leading woman, Helen Holmes was out of bed for the first time in a week for she had been threatened with pneumonia. The following day saw her at the bedside of McGowan, who will not be able to get around for some time.

The feature company at the American West Coast studios, has returned from a two weeks' trip to Santa Cruz Island, Calif., about thirty miles outside of Santa Barbara. The island is wild and mountainous, and its lakes, waterfalls and abundant semi-tropical vegetation combine to make wonderful scenic settings.

Six years ago Charles Ray was playing stock and musical comedy at Phoenix, Arizona. In the same company was the ingenue Jane Urban, who was taking small parts and the two were good friends and would help each other over the rough places by kindly criticism. The company disbanded and Ray went one way and Miss Urban another. The other night at a charity ball in Los Angeles they met and recognition was mutual. Miss Urban is still in musical comedy and Mr. Ray has been with the New York Motion Picture Corporation for the past two years.

Edward M. Roskam, president of the Life-Photo Film Corporation, returned to New York from New Orleans with the cast which completed the filming of Booth Tarkington's beautiful drama "Springtime."

A new comedy director for the Edison Company is James W. Castle. Mr. Castle brings with him all the wealth of successful experience gathered in his rise from call boy many years ago to the position of owner of well-known stage productions. He has been director for Madame Schuman-Heink, noted musical comedy successes, and has had such stage stars under him as Marie Cahill, Raymond Hitchcock, William T. Carlton and Adele Ritchie.

Edna Maison has been selected to play opposite to Murdock McQuarrie in a series of four Universal photoplays put into scenario form by Bess Meredyth from the stories by Bruno Lessing. Charles Giblyn will produce them.

It is easy enough to win a hundred yard dash when you are racing against such men as Eddie Dillon, who measures forty-two inches around the waist, Jack O'Brien, who walks a block to his work in the morning and a block home at night but beyond that takes no exercise he can avoid, and "Sheriff" Arthur Mackley whose training as a runner has been gained while riding horse back, but what Director D. W. Griffith is proud of is the time he made—eleven seconds flat.

Whoops of joy might have been heard emanating from the vicinity of "Big Chief" William Bertram, assistant to Henry Otto, when he was cast for an Indian part in "The Silent Way," a new American-Mutual photoplay. Mr. Bertram did not have to play Indian—he is a real redman.

A member of Thomas H. Ince's camera staff succeeded last week in filming the actual death of an aviator, named Thomas Hill. He rose in his monoplane at Venice to a height of 3000 feet and was in the act of looping the loop when one of the wings of the machine buckled and man and fabric started for the earth at almost unbelievable speed. The aviator was killed instantly.

Otis Turner, who has introduced so many stars into the picture game and who has written and directed about as many popular features as any man in the business, lives in a delightful bungalow at Hollywood, California, where he and his clever wife talk over the stories to be produced in the future.

Unlooked-for realism, unfortunate to the actress but giving a crowning thrill to the film, is shown in the big fire scene of Edison's "Lesson of the Flames," one of the "Olive's Opportunities" series. While being carried down the rope through the flames, Mabel Trunnelle's hair caught fire. The picture plainly shows the hair ablaze and the desperate attempt of Miss Trunnelle, three stories up, and her rescuer, Edwin Earle, to put out the blazing hair.

At the Strand theater, New York City, Marguerite Clark will be seen in "The Crucible," a picturization of Mark Lee Luther's powerful story of the same title which has been produced by the Famous Players Film Company.

Jack Rose and Ella Wheeler Wilcox have combined forces to produce plays that will thrill onlookers by dint of the dramatic facts of life. The productions are to be distributed via the United Film Service (Warner's Features, Inc.) which will shortly announce the first releases.

Leo D. Maloney is now with the Glendale, Calif., Kalem Company, under the direction of J. P. McGowan.

Inceville's fire-fighting bridage of fifty men, recruited from the cowboys working at the California studios passed in review before Thomas H. Ince recently. For months the famous director has tried to impress on his employees the danger of fire, and, while the apparatus with which to meet the danger always has been adequate, the New York Motion Corporation has wanted a volunteer bridage to hold in reserve.

In view of his success as an actor in the silent drama and as a help to beginners, J. Warren Kerrigan, who is starring in the "Terence O'Rourke" series, is publishing a 150 page book.

Reaves Eason, Jr., of the "Flying A" evidently has come to stay and has been stamped with his proper title. His advent is being generously recognized by a multitude of new-found friends. From Louise Lester comes a tiny gold ring set with a diminutive diamond; from Vivian Rich a silver set; from Charlotte Burton, a dainty basinette, and from Chick Morrison, a bank, which has a long list of charter contributors.

The past week has been a banner one for all of the Alliance's exchanges. The reports received by George T. Ames, head of the sales department, show that the volume of business being done by this firm is increasing in all parts of the country with great rapidity.

The Advance Motion Picture Company is now engaged in filming a four-reel industrial drama for the Imperial Brass Company of Chicago, in which the general worth and utility of the goods manufactured by that firm will be clearly demonstrated. Miss Louise Crolius, formerly of the Imp Company, is said to be playing one of the important roles in the production, and an able supporting company has been selected.

The popular demand for Sidney Bracy and Frank Farrington is so insistent that both of these "Million Dollar Mystery" stars will have parts in "Zudora." This will not in any way interfere with their appearances in regular Thanhouser releases.

Devore Parmer, formerly connected with the Edison, Biograph, Nestor and Crystal film companies, has been engaged by the Kinetophote Corporation for the "heavy" role of Gaston in its new big five-reeler, "A Man's Shadow," in support of Tom Terriss. Mr. Parmer will be remembered in the Middle West for his tours in Shakespearean and classic plays.

J. C. Groshut of the New York City office of the K. C. Booking Company was a Chicago visitor this week on business of importance. Mr. Groshut is delighted with the progress being made by the recently opened K. C. office in Chicago.

Arthur M. Brilant, formerly with the New York City News Association, and before that with middle west and Pacific coast newspapers, has joined the publicity staff of the Universal. He will be in charge of the Universal's syndicate service.

Helen Badgley will play an important part in the ninth episode of "Zudora." Little Miss Badgley will be the first child actress in motion pictures to be given a stellar part in a great serial production.

King Baggot is soon to be seen in a two-reel comedy-melodrama whose action all takes place within a period of three hours. Harvey H. Gates, now with Romaine Fielding, is the author of "At the Banquet Table," and George Lessey is producing it.

The call of the stage, supported by a fat contract from Bill Casey, well-known vaudeville manager, has enticed Paul Panzer, alias Owen of "The Perils of Pauline" series, away from the Pathe studio for a period of three or four months, after which he expects to return to the Jersey City studio and the screen.

Howell Hansel, director of Thanhouser's famous success, "The Million Dollar Mystery," has been put in charge of productions at the New Rochelle studios, taking the place of Lloyd Lonergan, who recently resigned from that company.

The Casino theater, a popular Broadway house, is acting as the medium for introducing World Film Corporation features to the public, and the crowds that pack the lobby before the matinee and evening performances are proof that the pictures are going big.

Two freight trains of twelve cars each will be used in a scene in "Zudora," Thanhouser's serial. The action requires both trains to be running at top speed when James Cruze climbs over on one train, releases a lever and cuts the train in half. Another setting of unusual gorgeousness will be seen in the eighth episode of "Zudora," when Elizabeth Forbes, recently added to the cast, will make her first appearance.

Fairchild & Paine have leased the Blotcky store building in Onawa, and will shortly open a modern motion picture theater.

W. C. Eddy has disposed of his motion picture theater, Orient, in Marengo, to L. E. Alexander of Colmar.

Lee & Willits, a company from Keithsburg, Iowa, have purchased the Majestic theater at De Witt from Milton Whitney.

C. W. Champlin has sold his moving picture show at Greene to Prior & Willard, who have taken possession. Mr. Prior is from Independence, and Mr. Willard is from Joliet, Ill.

The Colonial motion picture theater in Marshalltown has been sold by Dell Hoes to his brother, Frank Hoes.

W. H. Bollenbacher is erecting in Melbourne a building that will be occupied as a garage and picture show. The building will have dimensions of 75x100 feet, one story.

KENTUCKY.

A permit for a new moving picture theater at 1200 South Shelby street, Louisville, has been taken out by the South End Amusement Company. The building will be of brick and will be 47x140 feet. The estimated cost is $11,000.

The Arcade theater in Paducah is closed.

The Thoroughbred Film Company, Louisville; increasing capital from $50,000 to $100,000.

Fire broke out in the Arista motion picture theater in Lebanon, completely destroying it.

Owing to the new war tax, which became effective December 1, one of the two moving picture shows in Hazard has been discontinued indefinitely, while the same is true of other picture theaters in the mountain towns.

Eldridge Denham, who formerly ran the Silver Crescent theater in Columbia, Tennessee, has shipped the equipment to Russellville, where he will establish a show.

LOUISIANA.

New Orleans capitalists are seeking a location in Thibodaux for the opening of another picture show. They expect to secure a place and be ready for business about January 1.

After being closed for several weeks, during which time general improvements were made, the Bijou Dream theater was reopened November 28. With its beautiful effects, the picture house is now second to few movie theaters in New Orleans.

MARYLAND.

James Barry, manager and owner of the Grande Theater in Eckhart, has sold to A. L. Porter and George Dundon.

Plans for another motion picture parlor, to be erected in the northwestern section of Baltimore, have been announced. The building will be erected by Gottfried Helmig after plans by Architect Stanislaus Russell, on southwest corner of Presstman street and Kirby's lane, and will be one story high, of fireproof construction, with dimensions of 60x109 feet. The improvement will cost $8,000.

MASSACHUSETTS.

The Boston theater, one of Keith's interests, has changed its policy and is now being operated as a motion picture theater.

The Park theater of Boston, after being closed for some time undergoing extensive improvements, has been opened under new management. The interior of the theater has been entirely torn down. In place of the two balconies, the present Park has but one, and its seating capacity has been increased to 1,200. The interior has been decorated in gold and brown and white marble and is modeled after the Strand theater of New York. Joseph L. Roth is house manager.

The Park theater in Boston has reopened as a motion picture theater. This is the third theater in Boston that has changed its policy. The National and the Boston theaters, for many years legitimate houses, are now showing pictures.

MICHIGAN.

G. P. Williams has purchased from Charles Carmel the business and lease of the Zelah picture show house at 481 Moran street, Detroit, the consideration amounting to about $3,000.

Work has begun on the transformation of the building formerly occupied by the Rindge-Krekel company at 190 Monroe avenue, Grand Rapids, into a modern motion picture theater by Messrs. Gilligham and Smith. It will house the Original vaudette. The new home of the Original vaudette will have a seating capacity of 350 and will be complete in every detail of vaudette construction, thoroughly fire-proof and with adequate exits. It will be opened on New Year's eve.

Finishing touches are now being put on the new Aladdin motion picture theater in Bay City. The theater will be complete in every detail when the doors are thrown open to the public, which will be in a short time.

MISSOURI.

Mrs. Kinney has opened a motion picture theater in Memphis, showing two evenings a week.

The management of the Willis Wood theater in Kansas City has secured the Alco program.

A new moving picture theater is being erected by Frank Long at the southeast corner of Nineteenth and Olive streets, St. Joseph. Seating capacity 500.

MONTANA.

The Myrtle theater was recently opened in Lewiston under the management of John B. Ritch.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Pathe Daily News No. 84—DECEMBER 9.—This issue contains views of the interclass rush at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Troy, N. Y.; the arrival of U. S. marines in Philadelphia from Vera Cruz, Mex.; close up view of Walter Johnson, who has just signed $20,000 a year contract with Federal Baseball League and, in the war section, pictures from Petrovia, Servia; Bordeaux, France; St. Laureu, Belgium; and Constantinople, Turkey.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 83—SELIG—DECEMBER 14.—This issue contains scenes of the cane industry in Louisiana, close-up views of the new millionaire warden of Sing Sing Prison, New York, the Pueblo Indian village at the San Diego Exposition, "Rabbit" Maranville and his bride visit his team mate, Geroge Tyler, at the Tyler farm, illustrating how big league stars spend their winter months, gathering Christmas trees and interesting war views.

Pathe Daily News No. 85—DECEMBER 14.—Scenes depicting the arrival of Ambassador Myron T. Herrick, just returned from France, the destruction of 204,000 condemned eggs by federal officials in Chicago, views of the storm swept coast of New Jersey, with close ups of the damage at Seabright, the destruction of the Edison plant by fire at West Orange, N. J.; and, in the war section, views taken at Chauvancourt, France; Axel, Holland; Oostcamp, Belgium and Cracow, Austria, make this interesting.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 84—DECEMBER 17.—In this issue are shown views of the San Francisco Panama-Pacific Exposition buildings, New York society children exhibiting their ponies at the Madison Square horse show, Ambassador Myron T. Herrick just returned from France, and in the war section glimpses of the German cruisers Leipzig and Dresden, recently captured, also other scenes from the war zone.

A Matter of Court—BIOGRAPH—DECEMBER 21.—Madge prefers Dave to Clarence, both being rivals for her hand. Clarence writes Madge, "Since you won't marry me, my life is only worth two cents, and I am going to end it all." Later, Dave and Madge, joy riding, run over Clarence. He sues Dave for $500.00 damages, and a friend on the jury manages to have the verdict rendered in his favor. Madge and her mother, learning of the trouble, rush to the court, and Madge produces Clarence's letter. The judge orders a verdict of two cents awarded to Clarence, since that is his own value on his life.

The Dentist's Janitor—BIOGRAPH—DECEMBER 21.—The dentist's jealous wife hires Hemlock Bones & Co. to watch her husband. Disguised as window curtains the detectives begin their work, and when a man with the toothache comes in, accompanied by his wife, the detectives discover the janitor operating on him, while the dentist makes love to his wife. They rush to bring the dentist's wife to the scene, and while they are away, the dentist and the janitor change places. When the dentist's wife attacks the man she thinks her husband, she discovers it to be the janitor, and thereupon begs her husband to forgive her suspicions, and all ends happily.

The Adventure of the Wrong Santa Claus—EDISON—DECEMBER 21.—This is the last of Octavius' adventures, and culminates in his marriage to one of his fair clients. The story is of a counterfeit Santa Claus who gathers up all of the gifts and makes away with them, but is overtaken at the railroad depot by the real Santa Claus who is no other than the infallible Octavius in disguise. C.R.C.

Their Cheap Vacation—ESSANAY—DECEMBER 21.—This amusing little comedy features Wallace Beery and Betty Brown. The numerous adventures they encounter as newlyweds on their vacation are real laugh producers. They read of an ideal automobile trip which only costs $12, pack a camper's outfit on the car and start out. First a farmer demands that they pay $10 for ruining his grass; next they are arrested for speeding and fined $15; then a farmer tells them to come across with $10 for rent; that night they are visited by a huge snake; then comes the mosquito family, and when they try to smoke the pests out they set fire to the tent. They flee outside and find themselves in a rain storm, so are forced to retire to a farm house, where the children have the mumps. On the way home the car breaks down and the repair bill is $75. They wind up by both catching the mumps. C.J.C.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

The Mayor's Secretary—KALEM—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 21.—Another of the Alice Joyce series in which Alice appears in the role of Alma Dare, secretary to Robert Chandler, the reform candidate for mayor. Suspecting the girl of being a spy, Winton, a crooked "boss," secures her friendship, and Alma, to secure a document badly wanted by the mayor, pretends to respond to Winton's overtures and thus exposes a plot to hoodwink the mayor and defraud the city of a paving contract. Alma escapes from Winton's home, rushes to the city hall and warns the mayor in time to prevent his authorizing the contract, and the mayor, for once and all defeating Winton, takes Alma in his arms and begs her to become his wife.

In Port O' Dreams—(15TH AND LAST EPISODE OF "THE BELOVED ADVENTURER")—LUBIN—DECEMBER 21.—Lord Cecil and Lady Betty are discovered after a year of perfect peace and happiness at their home on the Croftlaigh estate, but Betty though herself content, fears Cecil is unhappy because of her humble birth, which denies her being received in English high society. On a neighboring estate lives the Duchess of Drex, who is sad and lonely, since twenty years before her daughter Elizabeth had eloped with Robert Lee, the son of a country squire, and gone to America. The duchess sends a trusted agent to seek her daughter, and word is brought back that the duchess is grandmother of Betty, Lady Cecil, and heir to the enormous fortune of the Duchess of Drex. Betty's social status is fixed, but her pleasure in this is as nothing compared to that she experienced on the day she stood beside Lord Cecil as he presents to his assembled tenants a child, which in the fullness of years will himself be Lord Cecil, nineteenth Earl of Swarthmore. Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe featured.

Till Death Us Do Part—SELIG—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 21.—A powerful dramatic story with leprosy as its theme, and Kathlyn Williams, Wheeler Oakman and Charles Clary as its stars. Anne Brewster is shipwrecked on a desert isle with Dr. Albert Leigh and Roderick Random, an athlete. When it is discovered that Anne is suffering from leprosy, Random flees in terror from the desert isle to a passing ship, while Dr. Leigh remains to marry and care for Anne. See review on page 835 of issue of Dec. 19. N.G.C.

Arthur Truman's Ward—VITAGRAPH—December 21.—On her way to visit her newly appointed guardian, whom she has never seen, Helen Russell is struck by an automobile and seriously injured. She is taken into a small bakery shop where Lillian Hardman, an orphan, is employed. When Lillian finds a suitcase left by Helen in which are letters and papers from Arthur Truman, her guardian, and later learns that Helen has died in the hospital, she resolves to take her place. Truman never doubts but that the girl is Helen, and when she proves awkward in society, he sends her to a finishing school. Arthur gradually learns to love her and on her return from school plans to propose to her. One day, Lillian, shopping, discovers that Helen is not dead, but having forgotten her past, is employed in a department store. She learns Helen's address, then visits Arthur and confesses her deception. Arthur places Helen in her rightful position as his ward, but will not permit Lillian to leave him. Since she can no longer be his ward, he makes her his wife. Lillian Walker featured.

On the Heights — Biograph — (Two Reels)—December 22.—Countess Irma Eberhard, betrothed to Colonel Brennan, meets the king on a hunting expedition, and the monarch, in love with her, summons her to the court as a lady-in-waiting to the queen, who is ill, and whispers in her ear, "Look upon the throne—the queen may die," and she succumbs to his advances. When a nurse is needed for the prince Irma recommends Walpurga, a peasant, to whom Baum, the king's secretary makes love, but is repulsed. When Irma sides with Walpurga, Baum writes her father, "The Countess Irma is over-friendly with the king." Colonel Brennan is with Count Eberhard when the letter comes and Eberhard writes Irma to come home, and dies with shame over her conduct. Following the funeral, Irma returns to the palace, but the king mocks her saying, "You looked upon the throne—the queen did not die." Infuriated she plans to kill him, but is stopped by Walpurga. Colonel Brennan then takes Irma to a convent, and the rest of his life mourns her.

The Volunteer Burglar—Essanay—December 22.—Richard Travers and Beverly Bayne are featured in this production. An author starts to write a motion picture scenario and, as he proceeds, the following story unfolds itself, the author himself appearing as the hero; Margery Trent tries to get certain papers to prove her identity. These papers are held by her uncle. She is entering the home of her uncle when "Tommyrot" happens along and helps her. They are caught in the house, but make their escape. "Tommyrot," after hearing her story, determines to get the papers. Margery receives a note telling her that her uncle has reconsidered and asking her to call. "Tommyrot" follows her and when her uncle attacks her, overpowers him. A man enters who proves to be her real uncle. The impostor is arrested, while "Tommyrot" turns to Margery to call her his own. C.J.C.

Olive Is Dismissed—Edison—December 22.—In this, the fifth release of the "Olive's Opportunities" series, the matter of Vance's contemplated marriage to the girl is brought to a climax. She overhears Bishop Mears advise Vance to give up the idea, and, for his sake, leaves the house, and secures employment as maid in the March household.

Mrs. March is a flighty creature, and gives most of her time to social functions. Olive's close attention to the sickly Bayard March's wants, apprizes her of the fact that he has heart disease. She promises to keep his secret. Mrs. March has meanwhile carried on a flirtation with Reginald Carrington. One day the pair are confronted by Carrington's neglected wife. This awakens Mrs. March and turns her thoughts toward home. Although it automatically dismisses her, Olive is pleased at Mrs. March's change of heart, and sets out light-heartedly on her search for employment. C.R.C.

The Winning Whiskers—Kalem—December 22.—Lizzie, the cook, would rather read a dime novel than eat. Leaving her work she begins the story of Stella, a beautiful heiress, who loves Billy. U. Knave, her guardian, objects, since Ima Crook, who has a hold upon Knave, demands the hand of Stella as the price of his silence. When Knave would compel Stella to marry Crook, Billy sneaks into the room, cuts off Crook's eyebrows and whiskers and pastes them on his own face, and when the minister appears, Billy, disguised, weds Stella. When Billy and Stella have departed, Crook revives and fights a duel with Knave. Just at this moment Lizzie's mistress enters and sends her back to her pots and pans in the kitchen. Marin Sais featured.

His Suicide—Lubin—December 22.—Bill Bogs, tired of life, is forbidden by his wife to even use the clothes line to hang himself with, and instead is put to work hanging out clothes. He gets a gun, but she refuses to let him spatter up the parlor with his blood, and he is not allowed to use a knife because his wife fears he may dull it. When he drinks a quart of gasoline and explodes himself, Myra is found weeping because Bill carried no fire insurance. On the same reel is:

Flossie's Daring Loyalty—Lubin—December 22.—Manly Mann loves Flossie Fay, his stenographer. Montague Marks, a business rival, seeing Manly dictate what he believes an important document, enters the office and demands that Flossie read him her notes, but when the girl refuses, Marks hires a band of thugs to assist him and drags Flossie first to the den of the thugs and later to the woods, where she is tied to a keg of powder. Manly, suspecting what has happened, follows and annihilates the thugs single handed. He then returns to his office where Flossie transcribes from her notes a formula for a dandruff cure.

Wade Brent Pays—Selig—December 22.—A beautifully photographed story of a hotel misunderstanding in which Edith Johnson, Pauline Sain and Barney Furey are featured. Wade Brent's father bequeaths him a fortune and leaves this in the hands of a strict guardian, since he knows of Wade's dissolute habits. In a quarrel with the guardian of the funds, Wade picks up a chair to strike his lawyer, and accidentally injures Ruth Illington, a stenographer. To atone for his fault, Wade arranges for Ruth to be sent to a sanitarium to recuperate. Aileen O'Connor, daughter of the woman in charge of the sanitarium has fallen in love with Wade and misconstrues his courtesy to Ruth, when she accuses Ruth of being supported by Wade. Ruth leaves the sanitarium at night, and falls over a cliff. Wade finds her and carries her to the hotel. Eventually Ruth meets and loves George Hartley, while Wade discovers Aileen's attractiveness and plans to marry her. N.G.C.

By the Governor's Order—Vitagraph—(Two Parts)—December 22.—Cyrus Howard, wealthy business man, refuses to permit his daughter Ethel to marry Allan Lawrence, and the young people elope, and until Allan loses his position are extremely happy. Shortly after Helen gives birth to a child she is compelled to write her father for help, and during a quarrel between the latter and Howard, she dies. Allan, in fury, attempts to shoot Howard and is sentenced to ten years in prison. Mr. Lawrence cares for Hope, his little granddaughter, and with the passing of time the little girl gradually wins the heart of Cyrus Howard, whose home is nearby. With the assistance of another crook, Allan escapes from prison and reaches home on Christmas day. Howard and Mr. Lawrence, now on friendly terms, have arranged a surprise Christmas for Hope, and when Allan climbs in the window to escape his pursuers, he sees and dons a Santa Claus suit which is lying in the room. Coming downstairs he encounters Hope, and is led into the parlor just as the policemen enter to seek him. He confesses all, and, as he is about to be taken back to jail, a telegram arrives from the governor, announcing that Mr. Lawrence's plea has been successful and Allan is pardoned. Maurice Costello featured.

'Twas The Night Before Christmas—Edison—December 23.—With the exception of Santa Claus, the cast of this picture is entirely a juvenile one. The three little Steuart children and the two Dawleys are the principals, though Andy Clarke also takes a small part as the Esquimo. The story contains considerably more good feeling than actual plot, but is acceptible as a Christmas offering.

The children decide that it is time that someone should give poor Santa a present, take up a collection, and surprise the old man in his home. C.R.C.

The Fable of the Husband Who Showed Up and Did His Duty—ESSANAY—DECEMBER 23.—Without much of a plot, this George Ade fable "gets over" in a most pleasing manner. Richard C. Travers, Gerda Holmes and Helen Dunbar have the leading roles. The interior sets and exterior locations are very well chosen and the photography is clear throughout. Mrs. Clymer has great social aspirations, but every time she gives a party her husband hides. She rallies the "hens" one afternoon for a musical. Hubby happens home early, so is forced to entertain the ladies. A young grass widow is present who looks mighty good to hubby. So he extends himself. Mrs. Clymer forbids him to ever show up at another one of her parties. Moral: Solomon proved his wisdom by marrying all of his wife's friends, but the modern wise man passes them up.

The Fatal Opal—KALEM—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 23.—Frank Morton, knowing his uncle dislikes Alice, keeps his marriage secret from Judge Morton. Frank wears an opal stick pin and in a quarrel with his uncle loses it and the judge finds it and sticks it in his coat lapel. Sandy McGee, a crook, sent to prison by the judge, escapes, becomes a butler in the judge's home, and one night when all the servants are away kills the judge. Before he dies, the judge frees his hands and with the stick pin writes the name of the murderer in blood on the leaf of a book. Frank is convicted of murdering his uncle and, later, Alice finds the writing in the book, and by getting McGee drunk induces him to confess all, thus freeing Frank, who immediately throws away the fatal opal. Marin Sais and Douglas Gerrard featured.

The Single Act—LUBIN—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 23.—George Burton, after committing a robbery, visits a saloon and the bartender reads to him a paragraph from a newspaper which says "A man, however damned, can yet justify his existence in one single act." This starts George on a plan for reformation, though next night George determines to visit a fashionable wedding in search of loot, and is only saved from capture by a little girl, who to escape punishment, denies having stolen out from her room to watch the party. George is in love with Mary Fox, and thoughts of her, together with the meeting of the little girl, lead him to vow never again to rob anyone. Eluding detectives, he goes to his rooms and changes his attire preparatory to visiting Mary and telling her of his resolution, but en route is killed by an explosion. George Routh featured.

One Traveler Returns—SELIG—DECEMBER 23.—Stella Razeto, Adda Gleason and Lamar Johnstone are featured in a romantic story, marked by splendid photography. Bob Warford, a wealthy bachelor, becomes engaged to Grace Travers, daughter of a country minister, although he is paying for the maintenance of pretty Thais Merton in the city at the same time. Bob tells Thais of his approaching marriage, and agrees to pay her $2,000 in full satisfaction of all claims. Thais, however, is unsatisfied and arranges with a lawyer to have a letter of confession delivered to Grace on the first anniversary of her marriage to Bob. She is injured in an automobile accident which causes her death, and on the anniversary day, returns in spirit to influence the messenger who is about to deliver her letter. The messenger tears up the epistle, and the spirit of Thais, instead of seeking revenge, blesses the couple on their anniversary morn.

The Professor's Romance—VITAGRAPH—DECEMBER 23.—The honorable John Cameron is much disturbed by the children of the widow Merrileigh next door, and is constantly annoyed by their baseballs, their pranks with the garden hose, and their noisiness. Whenever he complains, the widow insists upon the angelic nature of her children, but when he finally finishes the manuscript on which he has long been working and discovers the children dancing about a bonfire, it proves too much, and he breaks down. The widow's sympathy awakens his love, however, and he takes her in his arms. At this moment the children enter with the real manuscript, which they have hidden for a joke, so all ends happily, though the "angels" seem likely to have a strong hand to guide their future destinies. Sidney Drew featured.

The Suffering of Susan—BIOGRAPH—DECEMBER 24.—Susan insists on attending dramatic school, against the wishes of Joe, her sweetheart. Madam Weep, her teacher, insists that "to become a great actress you must suffer greatly," so Susan resolves to suffer. When Joe proposes she rejects him, though she suffers in doing so. In desperation, Joe determines to cure her of her folly and arranges with the antique leading lady of a stranded Shakespearean troupe to "show her up" at a benefit performance. At the performance Susan stumbles over rugs, forgets her part and generally disgraces herself, and the morning papers roast her for her performance, so Susan abandons the stage and consents to play the star part as Mrs. Joe.

Slippery Slim Gets Square—ESSANAY DECEMBER 24.—This film is doubtless founded on the fact that other people's misfortunes, when they are not of a serious nature, are always funny, but so realistic is Harry Todd's portrayal of the sufferer in this case that one cannot help but feel sorry for him. It is very amusing, however. A dance is to be given at the town hall that evening and Slim asks Sophie to accompany him. She accepts, so he hurries to the creek to take his bath. Mustang also invites Sophie, but is refused. He finds Slim's clothes and hides them. He then prepares to take Sophie to the dance. Slim manages to get home and puts some powder on Mustang's clothes which has a smarting effect. Mustang goes to call for Sophie, but is most uncomfortable. Slim writes a note telling Sophie that Mustang has smallpox and she throws him out. Slim then has things his own way.

A Soldier of Peace—LUBIN—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 24.—John Woodward, city health officer, marries Marie, a beautiful but spoiled girl. On their honeymoon, John is informed that an epidemic of diphtheria necessitates his return to duty, and when he breaks the news to Marie, his wife insists that if he leaves her it will be forever. John, faithful to duty, goes back to save the lives of the city people while Marie attempts to find forgetfulness in social activities, though her pleasure is marred by frequent visions of John. Unconsciously, she becomes more thoughtful of others, and one day meets an old lady who tells her of an incident of fifty years before, when the little old lady, then the belle of her village, went to the church to wed the youth of her heart, but he was called away by the fight at Bull Run and never came back, so that since that time she had only cherished his memory. Marie, reading that the epidemic had finally been suppressed, but that John himself is desperately ill, feels the call of duty and returns to John, arriving in time to greet him when he awakens from unconsciousness. Earl Metcalfe and Mary Keane featured.

A High Old Time—MINA—DECEMBER 24.—Josh and Miranda go to the big city on their honeymoon, and Josh gets into all sorts of trouble. He flirts with a pretty girl and is trounced by Miranda. He takes a trolley ride and has to taxi back. He visits the beach and is beset by the feminine bathers, but seeing Miranda coming he abandons her duster, coat and bag. Eph and Sinda, a pair of colored newlyweds, find the duster and Sinda puts it on, thus, later, leading Josh to follow her, believing her Miranda. After many adventures, which end in their entering a little house which is blown up by bombs dropped from aeroplanes, when an explosion test is made by the army, Miranda and Josh finally leave the city behind them.

The Knight Before Christmas—VITAGRAPH—DECEMBER 24.—Sonny goes to spend Christmas at his Aunt Kate's, having been given a dollar by his daddy. Before putting the children to bed, Aunt Kate recites "The Night Before Christmas," and tells them about the knights of old, sonny learning that a knight is one who always helps damsels in distress. While shopping next day, sonny gets lost and is rescued by little Annie O'Reilly, who takes him home with her. Sonny, bothered by the squalid aspect of the tenement, gives Annie his dollar with which he had intended to buy a baby brother. From the O'Reillys he is taken to the police station, where Aunt Kate finds him, and next day the O'Reillys are invited to participate in Aunt Kate's celebration. In the midst of things, daddy writes that sonny will find a live present waiting for him at home. Bobby Connelly featured.

Sweeney's Christmas Bird—Vitagraph—December 24.—The Sweeney's live above the Clancys. When Caesar, Mrs. Sweeney's parrot, dies, Mike goes out to bury it. At a saloon on the corner, he meets Clancy going home with a newly purchased turkey, and the packages become mixed. Mike buries Clancy's turkey and Clancy takes the dead parrot home. When Mrs. Clancy finds the bird there is a grand row, and Sweeney goes forth to buy a turkey of his own. Knowing it will be sent home, Clancy swipes it off the dumbwaiter, leaving the dead parrot in its place. Mrs. Sweeney almost faints when she sees poor dead Caesar again and seizing a flatiron awaits Mike's return. Clancy meets Sweeney again at the saloon, Sweeney having just won a pig on a raffle. When Clancy goes to get the turkey, he is surprised to find that the dog has eaten it. Opening Sweeney's door he is assaulted by the latter's wife, who thinks it is her husband, and as a result of the row, both families are arrested. The judge declares "A pig for your Christmas bird—or ten days" and Christmas day finds all four at the table in Sweeney's parlor enjoying a feast of roast pig. Hughie Mack, Flora Finch, William Shea and Kate Price featured.

The Way Home—Biograph—December 25.—A country boy obtains a city position. One night a customer calls to pay a big bill. The safe being locked the clerk takes the money home with him for safekeeping. but en route encounters two crooks, who, by a subterfuge, get him drunk and rob him. The boss discharges him as a result of this incident, and he takes to drink and the downward path. His parents are much troubled and the following summer among their boarders take in the girl crook who had helped her accomplice rob him. Discovering the boy's mother gazing at his photograph, the girl recognizes her erstwhile victim, and upon her return to the city finds him and sends him home, where, reunited with his family, he is content.

The Premature Compromise—Edison—(Two Reels)—December 25.—This is the second of the "Young Lord Stranleigh" adventure series featuring Marc MacDermott and Miriam Nesbitt. From this and the first release it looks as though Lord Stranleigh is going to be kept busy protecting the MacKellers from their Wall Street enemies. Duncan McRae is seen as the younger MacKeller, Frank McGlynn as the ship's captain, and Harry Linson as Johnson. Schwartzbrod and his gang, still smarting from the way in which Stranleigh outwitted them, conceive the idea of using the syndicate's steamer until the regular transfer of title is put through. MacKeller boards the steamer, and has it loaded. When the work is through Johnson, a tool of the syndicate, attacks MacKeller, and forces him into the hold. Some time after the ship has been put under way the captain discovers MacKeller in the hold, and puts him ashore in a yawl. Stranleigh assures him, on his return, that they can overhaul the Rajah in his speedy yacht, and, after an extended voyage they sink it. C.R.C.

Any Woman's Choice—Essanay (Two Reels) December 25.—Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Bryant Washburn and Helen Dunbar have the leading roles in this production. The plot deals with a woman, the other woman, a man and a mutual friend. The woman is married to the man, but still loves the mutual friend, who was her sweetheart before she met the man. The man's love dies and he neglects her, giving his love to the other woman. The woman loses heavily at cards and the other woman forces her to continue playing by threatening to tell the man of her folly. The mutual friend pays the debt when the woman appeals to him, and when the man hears of this he is enraged. The mutual friend brings the man to the realization of his neglect and the man decides to go away and leave them together. The woman clings to him, however, and the man agrees that she shall choose between them. She stretches out her arms to both of them as the picture fades, leaving it in doubt as to which she will go to.

The Lure of the Green Table—Lubin—December 25.—Harry Woods, engaged to Jessie Vail, gets heavily into debt from playing cards at his club. In desperation, he goes west to make a home for Jessie there. At the end of two years he writes Jessie that he is able to make the last payment on the ranch and still have plenty left. Harry visits the village to pay Lawrence, the man from whom he bought the ranch, finds him in a gambling hall and is asked to "sit in" in a hand of poker, when one of the players is called away. Harry consents and wins a big pot. Returning home, Harry feels the old lure of the green table and within a month, has lost, not only all his spare cash, but the deed to the ranch as well. Jessie, worried over his silence, goes west to learn the cause. Harry, in the gambling hall, gets word that a mighty pretty girl has stepped off the train, and when another gambler dares Harry to cut the deck to see who shall greet her, Harry accepts the challenge and loses. The gambler meets Jessie and is repulsed, while Harry, staggering out, is clasped in Jessie's arms. Realizing what it means, the gambler forces Harry to take back the deed to the ranch, and the greater part of his lost money, while the love of the good woman takes up the fight against "the lure of the green table." William Parsons and Dolly Larkin featured.

The Reformation of Ham—Kalem—December 25.—Ham and Shorty are sailors on the ship Phillalloo, anchored off Kulangsu, China. Shorty endeavors to cure Ham of drinking by placing snakes in his bunk, but, later, when the two go ashore, Ham forgets all about the snakes. The two purchase some fireworks and after annoying some Chinese pirates, engage in a battle which ends in victory for the sailors only when the fireworks are discharged. Back aboard ship, Shorty once more makes use of the snakes and eventually induces Ham to reform. Lloyd V. Hamilton featured.

Doc Yak and Santa Claus—Selig—December 25.—One of the most interesting, entertaining and thoroughly enjoyable Christmas offerings that the Selig Company has ever released, is this full reel cartoon comedy by Sidney Smith. Doc Yak, the famous cartoon creation of the illustrator is seen writing a letter to Santa Claus, and later receiving the gift which Santa Claus brings him. In addition to all of the humor and originality for which the Selig Doc Yak pictures are famous, a Christmas touch is given this one, by adding a realistic snow storm scene during the greater part of its length. All exhibitors will, undoubtedly, mark this release A-1 on their booking sheets. N.G.C.

His Unwitting Conquest—Biograph—December 26.—A novelist attempts to write a story about a certain type of woman but fails for lack of knowledge. Resolving to seek a woman of this type, he gets a friend to introduce him to a foreign actress with no intention of paying her serious attention, for he is happily married. He is constantly with her behind the scenes at the theater and in her home. At last possessed of material for his masterpiece, he writes the story, and the actress, piqued because he does not call, visits him on the day the story is completed, and makes it plain that she loves him. He then explains, "I do not love you; I wanted you only for this," and he shows her the story, In a rage she hurls the manuscript into the fire crying, "You had no right to it; it is my secret soul you have stolen." Then only does he realize what he has done, though it is too late to make amends for his unwitting conquest of the woman.

The Man Who Vanished—Edison—December 26.—Here is another release of the "Below the Dead Line" series, featuring Robert Conness as the famous detective, Felix Boyd. As in the case of its predecessors the climax of this mystery is sprung at the beginning of the picture, and the developments which lead up to it are explained later by Boyd, himself, in his resume of the crime. To prevent their plans for robbing the Gotham Trust Company being interfered with the Wyckoff gang has one of its members shadow Felix Boyd, and keep them posted on his movements. The detective becomes aware of the man dogging his steps, turns the tables on him, and, after an interview with the cashier of the bank, learns enough facts to enable him to guess the exact hour at which the robbery is to take place. He enlists the aid of the police, and captures the entire gang. C. R. C.

Broncho Billy and the Sheriff's Office—ESSANAY—DECEMBER 26.—More dramatic acting is seen in this film than has been required in this series for some time. Excitement runs high at all times and the climax is a very pleasing one. It is a typical western offering and to exhibitors seeking a production of this kind the reviewer has no hesitancy in recommending it. Broncho Billy is requested to resign as sheriff and John Jenkin's son becomes his successor. The new sheriff is given a fright a few days later by an outlaw and sends in his resignation. Broncho refuses to return to the office. Shortly afterward, the outlaw, to prove to Broncho's sweetheart, that he has no fear of him attacks him while he sleeps and binds him. Broncho frees himself and asks to be made sheriff. He starts after the outlaw and captures him. He then again resigns. C.J.C.

The Escape on the Limited—KALEM—DECEMBER 26.—Another of the interesting "Hazards of Helen" series featuring Helen Holmes. Brandt, a defaulting bank cashier, hides in Lone Point, but his whereabouts is learned by Sheriden, a detective, who wires Helen to detain Brandt until he arrives. Brandt ties Helen up and escapes on the limited, but the girl manages to throw a telephone through the window, thus attracting the attention of Sheriden when he arrives. The two board a gasoline speeder and set out to overtake the limited. Knowing capture stares him in the face, Brandt leaps from the flying train and is killed.

A Troublesome Cat—LUBIN—DECEMBER 26.—A cartoon picture by Vincent Whitman, showing a hard working bill poster awakened by the howls of a cat and of his pursuing his tormentor over bedstead, chairs, up the chimney and over house tops until he finally smashes it with his paste brush, and then unable to sleep begins posting Lubin bills.

The Champion Bear Slayer—SELIG—DECEMBER 26.—A slap-stick comedy in which father after relating his hair-raising adventures with a bear has a chance to demonstrate his bravery at home, in opposing a small cub, which has been brought there by his daughter who has just returned from a western vacation trip. Father imagines the cub several times its real size and flees in terror and pajamas from cellar to garret pursued by the bear. The police arrive just after the daughter has rounded up the cub on the fire escape, and father has to suffer the joshes of the whole police department, when he beholds the actual size of the little rascal who has pursued him. Lee Morris and one of the Selig cubs featured. N.G.C.

Brannigan's Band—LUBIN—DECEMBER 26.—Casey, left to mind the baby, is disturbed when Mike Brannigan, leading his band at practice, wakes the baby. He takes the baby out doors where Mike can hear it, but the noise is drowned. He hires Angelo, an organ grinder, but the band chases him away. Eventually Mrs. Casey returns, and after dousing the band with water, stops the concert. On the same reel is:

An Affair for the Police—VITAGRAPH—DECEMBER 26.—Preparing for her wedding, Yvonne Whelen engages Al Shannon, a private detective, to guard her wedding presents. Yvonne's sister, Mrs. Van Austin, thinks the hiring of a detective an insult to the guests, but after the ceremony it is discovered that a priceless necklace has disappeared. All the guests are searched without result, and the case is indeed a mystery. Next day, Miss Scott, Shannon's female assistant, arranges for Yvonne to give an "at home" dinner and prepares to trap the thief, she herself to be present as a maid, while Shannon makes up as a butler. They get a clue which leads to the home of Mrs. Van Austin, and there the necklace and the jewels are found. Instead of being frightened, Mrs. Van Austin laughs and explains the whole thing was a joke to prove to Yvonne that the robbery could occur despite the presence of a detective. Leah Baird featured.

Mutual Program

In the Conservatory—PRINCESS—DECEMBER 11.—Just as Mrs. Van Schuyler is about to have her governess arrested for stealing her jewels, a fine-looking, well-dressed stranger comes forward, and confesses to the theft. Another guest shows a police shield, introduces himself as Sergeant Wilson, handcuffs the confessor, and leads him away. On the street Wilson removes the handcuffs from his prisoner, and explains that he, too, is a thief, posing as a detective at times to extricate others from embarrassing circumstances. The next instant the "prisoner" springs forward, handcuffs Wilson, and escorts him to jail. Wilson has fallen into the trap laid for him by one of the city's cleverest detectives.

The Barrier of Flames—THANHOUSER—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 15.—Mayor Southwick's little girl, Helen, strays away from home, and wanders into an old house in the woods that is used by a political boss for holding secret conferences. The boss orders the housekeeper to guard Helen, intending to use the child as a lever to compel her father to sign certain dishonest franchise bills. The housekeeper leaves her charge, and during her absence the house catches afire. Shep, Helen's pet, has trailed her, and arrives just in time to rescue his mistress by climbing up a ladder, jumping through a skylight, and leading the firemen to the attic room in which the little girl is imprisoned. Helen is carried downstairs by the firemen, and Shep makes his escape by leaping from the top story of the burning house into the fire net.

Mutual Weekly No. 103—MUTUAL—DECEMBER 17.—In this issue are views of the horse show in New York, a terrific storm along the eastern coast which caused a million-dollar loss, the sailing of the Cunarder Lusitania from New York on her last trip, and, in the war section, views of the redoubtable Cossacks, also scenes amid French, English and Belgian lines.

Shadows and Sunhine—PRINCESS—DECEMBER 18.—Madeline and Marion, twin sisters, are orphans. Tom Sykes adopts Madeline, and later, after his wife's death, turns burglar and forces the girl to be his accomplice. Marion has fallen into the hands of wealthy Mr. and Mrs. Gale. Sykes is shot while attempting to rob the Gale home, and Madeline, who has been ransacking Marion's room, is discovered and pitied by its occupant, and invited to share her bed with her for the night. In the morning Mrs. Gale is astounded to find two Marions in bed. Her husband then tells the story of the twins, and the girls are overjoyed to learn that they are sisters.

Two Kisses—ROYAL—DECEMBER 19.—Jed, the new clerk, of country origin, knows nothing of the popular song, "Two Kisses," and when the female customers ask for it he accommodates them by two big smacks. A whirlwind of excitement follows in the wake of this, and in the end Jed and the proprietor of the music store are roughly treated by the mob of insulted customers.

The Sower Reaps—AMERICAN—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 21.—Peter Pelham and Ben Rolfe are rival candidates for district attorney. When Pike, an old miser, is killed, the suspicion rests upon Tim, Ben's brother, but eventually thumb-print evidence brings about the fact that Pelham fired the fatal shot. He confesses and pleads self-defense, eventually leaving town, and Ben wins both the election and the hand of the girl he loves. See review on page 895 of this issue. N.G.C.

Our Mutual Girl—(CHAPTER 49)—RELIANCE—DECEMBER 21.—Margaret is presented to George Barr McCutcheon, who relates for her special benefit some of the incidents he has happened across, which have provided material for his famous romances. Captain James Curtin of the United States Cavalry falls in love with a girl who visits the grounds at headquarters, and a later meeting on Fifth avenue convinces him that his feeling is reciprocated. An elderly man cuts short their conversation by hurrying the girl off. Curtin learns that the man tipped a bellboy with a coin that was minted in one of the Balkan states and sails abroad, intent on finding the kingdom whence the money came. He is successful, and learns that the girl is the Princess Olga and the elderly man the prime minister. Curtin also learns that the prime minister is at the head of a conspiracy to usurp the throne. The American averts the national calamity, saves the reigning family, and wins the girl for his wife.

Brass Buttons—BEAUTY—DECEMBER 22.—An uproarious farce comedy by the Beauty company, concerning the admiration of Mary McArthur for brass buttons. When Owen and Jim, her two lovers, discover her fondness for the glitter of brass buttons, Jim secures a policeman's unifom and masquerades in that guise to win her affections, while Owen borrows the uniform of a fireman, trying to secure attention himself. Eventually Jim is arrested for impersonating an officer, while Owen and Mary patch up their little differences and live happily ever after. Webster Campbell, Joseph Harris and Virginia Kirtley featured. N. G. C.

The Better Way—Majestic—December 22.—On being released from prison Sunbeam's father secures a job as night watchman, but is discharged when his past record becomes known. Sunbeam obtains work as a "slavey" in order to support her father and herself. He does not like the idea of his daughter working, though he does not know where she is employed, and turns crook again. He attempts to rob the house in which Sunbeam is working. She discovers him, and helps him to escape when the rest of the family become aroused. Returning home later, she forgives him for drifting into his old ways, and they are happy again.

Under False Colors—Thanhouser—(Two Reels)—December 22.—Genevieve Watts, an heiress, is tired of the sham of society life, but her conventional aunt will not listen to her remonstrances. Several months later Genevieve meets a charming country girl whom she invites to her Fifth avenue home, determined to show her aunt exactly how artificial the bonds of friendship and love are in their select circle of acquaintances. Genevieve dresses Mary up beautifully and introduces her as a foreign princess. She becomes the center of attraction immediately even Genevieve's fiance being smitten with her beauty. Genevieve then explains the origin of her princess, and, title gone, Mary finds that her ardent suitors have disappeared with it. She returns to the country disgusted with society life. Genevieve's aunt concedes that her niece's opinion of society is a correct one.

The Passing of Two-Gun Hicks—Broncho—(Two Reels)—December 23.—Moose Gulch wakes up with a jolt to the realization that a real "bad man" is in its midst. The speed with which the news that Two-Gun Hicks shot Bad Ike, a bully, travels is only equaled by the effect of the wave of love that sweeps over Hicks on his first seeing Mrs. Jenks. His advances to her being rudely repulsed, Hicks is mystified as to why she should be so loyal to her husband, who is the town drunkard. Hayes, a gambler, who is also smitten with Mrs. Jenks' charms, thinks he sees a way of killing two birds with one stone by inciting Jenks against Hicks. Two-Gun receives the drunkard's command to leave town before sunset the next day very calmly, knowing that he has nothing to fear from him if it comes to a draw. That night Mrs. Jenks visits Hicks, and implores him not to kill her husband. For her sake he spares the drunkard, and the next day leaves the town, followed by the jeers of the citizens.

Tin Can Shack—American—December 23—Splendid photography and some wonderful backgrounds make this an exceptional release. It tells how Joseph Ghar's love for his granddaughter makes him disliked by his son-in-law. Ghar takes Olga, his little granddaughter, and flees to the mountains and lives in Tin Can shack. Hugh Dawson, a young trapper, some fifteen years later, sees Olga and falls in love with her and eventually Ghar's son-in-law and daughter, through an auto accident, learn the whereabouts of their child and a reconciliation is effected. Ghar returns to the city with them and Dawson arranges to call upon Olga in the future quite regularly. Edward Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood featured. N. G. C.

A Lucky Disappointment—Reliance—December 23.—Mr. Fairley objects to Jack Holt's calling on his daughter, and orders him away. While Fairley is away at the bank Jack returns, and induces Myrtle to elope with him that night. They are successful in getting away without being discovered, but are disappointed on arriving at the parson's house by being told that he is not in. The elopers return to the ranch house just in time to prevent two tinkers from robbing Fairley. The rancher pays his debt of gratitude to the couple by consenting to their marriage.

The Last of the Line—Domino—(Two Reels)—December 24.—Gray Otter, the last of a long line of powerful Sioux chiefs, is much disappointed in his son, Tiah, when he returns from the white man's college. The young buck turns out to be a drunken renegade, and is soon thoroughly despised by both the Indians and white men. Tiah breaks his father's treaty with the colonel of the garrison by gathering a number of sluggards, and attacking the army paymaster's wagon train. Gray Otter hears the firing, hurries to the scene, and, angered at his son's conduct, shoots him. The soldiers are all killed by the Indians, and, as no one is left to tell the tale, Gray Otter leads the colonel to believe that Tiah was killed while defending the paymaster. The young buck is buried with high military honors.

In the Sage Brush Country—Kay Bee—(Two Reels)—December 25.—Holdups being frequent in the Wolf Creek district, Edith Wilding sets out for the Lost Hope mine in her husband's place to allay suspicion. Jim Brandon, a bandit, sees the woman come out of the Lost Hope office, and, guessing the truth boards the stage with her. It is held up in a deserted region by Juan, a Mexican bandit, and Jim and the driver are relieved of their valuables, but Edith is told by the bandit that he will take nothing but a kiss from her, whereupon she slaps him across the mouth. Incensed at this Juan orders Jim and the driver to whip up the horses, and, when they have done so, he drags Edith off to a shack in the mountains. Apparently departing on the stage, Jim gets out, takes up the couple's trail, and follows them to the shack, where he shoots the bandit and rescues Edith.

The Exposure — Reliance — (Two Reels)—December 26.—Joe Walsh receives a letter from his uncle offering him a good position in his law office. He accepts. Just before leaving for the West to take up his new work he and Helen, his sweetheart, quarrel over some slight thing. Six years later Helen is a competent writer on a large daily. She is sent West to cover a graft story for another paper, and is shocked when, on having a dictograph installed in Phelan's room, she learns that Joe Walsh is the one accepting the graft money. They meet the next day, and Joe explains that he is acting as one of the principals in the affair in order to secure evidence enough to convict the guilty councilmen. They work together on the exposé, and their success makes Helen known as a clever newspaper woman while Joe is given the credit of being an exceedingly sharp and honest lawyer.

Carmen's Romance—Sterling—December 21.—Buster becomes angry when Chandler, a city chap, steals the affection of his sweetheart, Carmen, and challenges him to a fight. Buster's anger is not appeased any by being soundly thrashed by Chandler, and he decides to wreak his revenge when he sees Chandler peering down into a well. He steals up behind his rival, and hits him with a stick, knocking him into the well. This scares Buster and he tries to help him out, but instead is pulled in himself. Carmen hears the boys' cries, and, with the aid of Billy, rescues them. Billy scolds Buster for his unsportsmanlike action, and forbids him to intrude on the lovers again.

The King and the Man—Victor—(Two Reels) — December 21.—In this, the fourth release of the "Terence O'Rourke, Gentleman Adventurer," series, J. Warren Kerrigan as Terence takes a hand in a conspiracy against King Aribet of Zeta, and saves the ruler's life. According to the laws of his country King Aribet is forbidden to marry anyone coming under his rule. In accepting the alternative he would bring about an alliance between Zeta and another country, but he would be deprived of Princess Sophia, with whom he is in love. O'Rourke is commissioned to protect the king against a band of Russian secret service agents who are plotting to assassinate him. O'Rourke bears a remarkable resemblance to the king, and decides to impersonate him when he learns that the conspirators are on their way to the hunting lodge at which the king is staying. O'Rourke's bravery and diplomacy hold the would-be assassins in check, and, when their lust for blood is somewhat abated, they agree to allow the king to leave the country safely, abdicating the throne, but fully recompensed in the love of Princess Sophia.

Vivian's Beauty Test—CRYSTAL—DECEMBER 22.—On arriving at a fashionable beach Gus and Mike discard their wives as not being classy enough, and start a flirtation with winsome Vivian, who is stopping at the cottage also. She encourages them, and later meets their wives, Sally and Molly, who admire her smart clothes. She promises to make them beautiful and does. Made up to look funny Vivian ceases to impress Gus and Mike any longer. They flirt with the two beatiful women, not knowing that they are their wives. Vivian approaches them on the porch, and introduces the two flirts to their companions. The men are astounded to learn that they are Sally and Molly.

The Call of the Waves—GOLD SEAL—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 22.—Grace is a wild, care-free sort of a girl living with her father in a village on the coast. Frank, a wealthy young city man, stops at the village on one of his outing excursions, and a romance springs up between him and Grace. Shortly after Frank leaves Grace saves the lives of a rich society woman and her son, and as a reward receives an invitation to visit them in the city. She accepts, and later attends a reception at which Frank, also, is present. He does not recognize her in her new clothes and smiles at her awkward mistakes. Grace sees it, and determines to make him acknowledge that she is his equal. The rich lady grants her request to send her to Europe, and there she becomes an accomplished young woman. While homeward bound she becomes a victim of Monte Carlo, and there meets Frank, who has journeyed to Europe in an effort to forget her. Each feels unworthy of the other, but on later meeting again in the old fishing village, their fears and doubts are dispelled in a true lover's embrace.

For I Have Toiled—NESTOR—DECEMBER 22. The manager of Hiram Marshall's steel works suggests that they save money by cutting the mens' wages. The secretary objects on the grounds that the men are at present underpaid. To learn actual conditions himself Marshall garbs himself as a workman, and obtains employment among his own men. After a few hours of hard work at a forge he faints, and is carried home. On recovering he announces that instead of cutting the wage scale he is going to change it so that the toilers will share in the proceeds of their labor. A love interest is woven into the play in the romance between Marshall's daughter and his secretary.

The Fortunes of Margaret—ECLAIR—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 23.—Lemuel Babcock, a ne'er-do-well, steals the savings that were to offset the mortgage on his father's farm; Isabel, his sister, suspects him of the theft, but, on being questioned by her father, will neither deny nor admit that she knows anything about it. Firmly believing that she is the guilty one Farmer Babcock orders Isabel to leave home. In the city the pretty girl has little trouble in finding work, and, after a short time becomes married to her employer. Four or five years pass without Isabel's hearing from her father. One day her little daughter is saved from an auto truck by a street sweeper, and every day after that the little girl and her nurse visit the old man. Lemuel, in the meantime, has fallen in with a gang of crooks, and in an attempt to rob Isabel's house is shot. Before he dies she obtains her father's address from him. A happy reunion takes place between them, and, when Isabel's husband learns that he is the man who saved his daughter from the auto truck he insists that Mr. Babcock spend the rest of his days with them.

Love and Spirits—JOKER—DECEMBER 23. Eddie is in love with Betty, whose parents are ardent followers of a spiritualistic cult. Not knowing this Eddie applauds Madam Wanda's demonstration, and is banished from the house. His chum, Ernie, advises him to approach Madam Wanda on the subject of aiding his suit with Betty by telling the girl and her parents that Eddie is decreed her future husband by Fate. Madam Wanda agrees, and Ernie enacts his share in the ceremony, which is to play the part of a ghost. The scheme is given away by accident, and while Betty's father pursues the fleeing medium Eddie and the girl hasten away and get married. Betty's father objects strenuously at first, but the sight of the ghost limbers up his consent, and the couple are forgiven.

The Big Sister's Christmas—REX—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 24.—Ann is the "big sister" of the Towne family. Her younger sister, Marty, attends a party at a settlement house, and meets John Waters, a young artist. Waters finds that Marty has some talent in drawing, and they become intimately acquainted much to the discomfiture of Bob, Marty's sweetheart. The girl invites Waters to the house, and there he meets Ann. She is attracted to the clean-cut young fellow, but, believing that he is in love with Marty, does not encourage his attentions. On Christmas eve Waters and Bob put up the Towne Christmas tree, and afterwards distribute the gifts. After several gifts have been presented, Ann, thinking that there is nothing for her, slips into her room and begins to cry. Waters enters and presents her with a singularly small package which she finds, on opening, contains an engagement ring.

Innocent Dad—STERLING—DECEMBER 24.—While spending a day at the beach Arthur and Papa become separated. Papa enters a restaurant, and in less than no time is in a hot argument with the waiter. He takes refuge under a table just as Arthur enters with a girl. They sit at the table under which he is hiding. The girl's sweetheart follows them in, and Arthur, when he sees him, makes a quick get-away. Papa sees a chance to escape, picks up the table, and walks out. The sweetheart pursues him, thinking him Arthur, and the affair ends out in the water with the pair still fighting.

Hunting in Crazyland—POWERS—DECEMBER 25.—On the same reel with "The Japanese Silk Industry." An animated cartoon comedy by Vincent I. Whitman, and unusually humorous. As cartoon comedies are greatly in demand this should prove a live addition to an exhibitor's program. On the same reel with:

The Japanese Silk Industry—POWERS—DECEMBER 25.—A highly entertaining educational subject picturing the implements, raw material and people that are responsible for the weaving of silk fabrics in Japan. It is one of the chapters of Homer Croy's foreign educational series.

Who Stole the Bridegroom—NESTOR—DECEMBER 25.—On the day on which they are to act as witnesses to the marriage of Eddie and Bess Mr. and Mrs. French's baby is taken ill, and they find it necessary to send for the doctor. Eddie calls on them before the doctor's arrival, and, after fondling the child for a while, becomes marked with small red spots. The doctor pronounces it as smallpox. Eddie eludes him and his assistants, and rushes off to the wedding. The men recapture him, and take him back to French's, where another doctor pronounces the spots to be symptoms of prickly heat.

The Accusation—VICTOR—(TWO REELS) DECEMBER 25.—John Dix is angered on hearing that his rival, James Dayton, has won the hand of Colonel Lund's daughter, Cora, and schemes to besmirch the honorable young fellow's name. He compels Mary Dix, a girl whom he has wronged, to tell the colonel and his daughter that Dayton is the father of her nameless child. At first they doubt her statement, but when she gives intimate data and other circumstantial evidence they began to fear that it is so. Dayton enters and is confronted with the woman's claim. Hurt by the injustice of his position he leaves the Lund home, crushed and despondent. Mary asks Dix to marry her according to his promise, but he refuses. She then refutes her former statement to the Lunds, clearing Dayton. In the end the colonel induces Dix to marry the girl he deceived, and the affair ends happily.

Hot Stuff—Joker—December 26.—A quarrel between Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Smith opens the way for Tramp Clarence's acquiring a fine Christmas dinner. Both women go out, and Tramp takes Mrs. Smith's turkey. She accuses Mrs. Brown of the theft. Later, with Tramp's assistance, Mrs. Brown's goose appears in Mrs. Smith's ice chest. Vowing revenge on each other they each make a pie, one seasoning it with cayenne and the other with tabasco. Clarence steals them both, and trades them for a cigar at the grocery store. That night when it is time to serve the pie at Brown's and Smith's they discover that the pies have disappeared, and send to the grocer's. He sends them the two pies brought in by Clarence. The guests begin to eat the desert, but do not get further than the first bite.

The Law of the Range—101 Bison—(Three Reels)—December 26.—Tex Foster is the cattle king of the Cimarron Range district in New Mexico, and his word is law until the arrival of Frank Smith. The newcomer pastures his cattle on free land, and defies Foster to stop him. The cattle king threatens to gobble up him and his property unless he keep off of "his land." Smith resents being bullied in this manner, and he and his foreman start a systematic steal on Foster's cattle. The latter does not miss them until the round-up reports come in, when he finds that his calves have fallen off in numbers enormously while Smith's have risen in accordance. Foster openly accuses Smith of rustling, and has him arrested, but the judge dismisses the case for lack of evidence. The cattle king and his men descend upon Smith's ranch house, capture him, and prepare to hang him. The sympathy of the town is with Smith, and when the cattlemen learn that Foster is about to hang him they break up the lynching party, and free him. Foster is killed in the fight, and Smith swears off from rustling forever.

The Manicure Girl—L-Ko—December 27. The head barber believes that he is his manicure girl's only suitor until one day he discovers her in the company of another man. A fight follows during which the girl faints and the head barber receives a black eye, and numerous minor bruises. He hastens to procure a stimulant for his fainting beauty, and on his return finds her chatting gaily with another man. The new rival is quickly disposed of by being thrown into the lake. Not seeing him come up he believes that he has committed a murder, and rushes to a barber shop to disguise himself by having his mustache cut off. He recognizes the barber as his old rival just in time, and makes a break for liberty. After considerable chasing and fighting the victor goes to claim the fickle manicure girl only to find her seated between two new suitors, kissing them alternately.

Her Escape—Rex—(Two Reels)—December 27.—Pauline is forced to act as "lookout" for her father and brother, who are desperate crooks. One night she reads one of the Salvation Army's pamphlets, and is impressed by its contents. Angered by Pauline's recital of her experience, the father starts after her with a knife, trips at the head of the stairs, and is killed by the fall. Pauline obtains a position as nurse in a wealthy family, and accompanies them when they move to the West. Pete, her brother, follows her, and one day accosts her in the park. Paul Reeves, a wealthy young mine owner, takes exception to his actions, and knocks him down. The friendship between Pauline and Reeves ripens into love, and a short time later they marry. Pete, now at the head of a gang of thieves, calls on Pauline and demands money. She breaks his grasp and runs downstairs. Pete, partly intoxicated, attempts to follow, and falls down the stairs, breaking his neck.

The Truth Wagon — Masterpiece — (Five Reels)—December 14.—John Ross, an idle son of the rich, is a practical joker, as is shown by his many pranks in the first part of this story. Helen Dean a reporter on "Truth," a fast dying newspaper owned by her father seeks John for an interview in regard to his latest prank. She asks him, as all the others have done, why he does not tell the truth and go to work and he startles everyone by announcing that he will buy the paper. He does this and at once wages war on crooked politicians. His father is a candidate for governor, and when he tells him that he is merely a tool in the hands of the machine a break occurs between them. John exposes the machine and nominates Helen's father as candidate on the opposing ticket. The machine, however, secures a story which compromises Helen's honor and then agrees to trade it for a story John holds exposing their methods. John is forced to do this but still holds the card up his sleeve and plays it when he announces that his father has severed connections with the body that tried to wreck the "Truth" offices, but John secures a number of his prize-fighting friends and in the struggle which takes place between the two factions in the office the machine men are thrown out. Dean wins the governor's chair and John claims Helen as his bride.

Box Office

The Idler—Box Office—(Five Reels)—Mark Cross emigrates from London to the far West in search of adventure. John Harding, born of wealthy parents but disinherited is also seeking his fortune in the gold fields. One day Harding received word that his father had died and that he is now Sir John Harding. Before he returns to civilization, however, he becomes involved in a quarrel with a man named Strong and the latter is accidentally shot during the dispute. Harding flees to England and Strong's brother vows to avenge the death. Years later in London Harding, who has married the girl both he and Cross were in love with before they left England. comes face to face with Cross and Strong who have become partners and have struck it rich. In order to win Lady Harding, Cross plans to have Strong kill Sir John in a duel. He arranges the affair between them and then lures Lady Harding to his apartments. When Sir John comes to seek her the three face each other in a dramatic climax and both men realize her worth. They shake hands and Mark decides to go away, taking Strong with him.

Eclectic

When Wealth Aspired — Pathe — (Three Reels).—The injustice of selling a girl for a title and the tragic results that sometimes come of it are graphically pictured in this picture. The story is so presented that the subject does not appear to be overdrawn, and the scenes, especially of the duels, are decidedly tense and realistic. Paola Donnetti's wealthy but uncultured parents gratify their desire to have a title in the family by marrying their daughter to the penniless and majestic-looking Due de Rondoza. Robert Santello, Donnetti's secretary, is earnestly in love with Paola and denounces the duke for the motives that prompt his marriage to the girl. They duel, and Santello is killed. Later Paola learns of the commercial side of her marriage, and begins to hate the duke. By her attentions to Prince Renucci she causes a duel between him and the duke. The prince, an expert duelist, finds an easy victim in his opponent, and the duke dies, pleading with Paola to forgive him. C.R.C.

Whiffles Misses Mrs. Whiffles—PATHE. Whiffles is jealous to the point of desperation. He flies into a rage because a shoeman takes his wife's foot up in his lap when trying to fit her in shoes, and later, when he discovers one of his friends in the parlor conversing with his Mrs. Whiffles, he shoots him. The jealous man's wife and friend both pretend to be dead, and chuckles inwardly when Whiffles begs them to come back to life. He is over-joyed on learning that they were only feigning death, and promises Mrs. Whiffles never to let his jealousy overcome his good judgment again. On the same reel with:

The Valley of the Bourne—PATHE.—This is a beautifully colored educational subject showing views of the famous Valley of the Bourne in France. C.R.C.

The Life of Our Savior—PATHE—(SEVEN REELS).—A beautifully colored film presenting the life of Christ from the time of his birth until the crucifixion and resurrection. The sub-titles used are scriptural quotations and the setting is the actual Holy Land. A complete review will be found on page 890, this issue.

The Perils of Pauline—TWENTIETH EPISODE)—PATHE.—Unlike most of its predecessors this release does not contain any feat that can be classed as unusually hazardous, but it is spell-binding nevertheless. While on a trip in the Marvin yacht Pauline prevails upon Harry to teach her how to run the motor boat. The next day she ventures out in the boat alone. Owen is beside himself with joy when he sees Pauline cast off for he has substituted the wooden plug in the bottom of the boat with cotton waste. An hour later the boat begins to fill up, and Pauline and her dog desert the boat for an old barge that is lying directly in their path. Some U. S. warships start target practice, and Pauline soon finds that she has taken refuge on their target. The dog is dispatched to the warships with a note, and, a cutter meeting him half way, takes him aboard and rescues his mistress. In the meantime Owen and the captain of the yacht become engaged in a quarrel. Their struggles bring them near the rail, and the sailor pushes Owen overboard. The villain drowns and Harry and Pauline are re-united, their troubles coming to an end. C.R.C.

General Special

The Little Angel of Canyon Creek—VITAGRAPH—(FIVE REELS).—Ten year old Olaf Tryggvesson is sent west by a mission worker with a party of motherless children, but becomes separated from them when he leaves their train. Dead Shot Jackson, a bad man, and his partner visit an Indian camp, into which little Olaf is brought by one of the tribe who has found him. In a fight over a game of cards Jackson's partner, an Indian and his squaw are killed and Blue Wing an Indian boy is knocked senseless. Jackson carries Blue Wing to Canyon Creek and blames him for the murder. Olaf who has seen the shooting follows them and saves Blue Wing from being hung by refuting Jackson's testimony, Jackson, however, escapes. Time passes and Olaf becomes a great friend of Parson Bill, who lives at Canyon Creek. The Morrison family arrive and establish a Sunday school and Bill falls in love with Mary Morrison. Dead Shot Jackson returns to camp and tries to break up one of the meetings. A shot aimed at Parson Bill is received by little Olaf and Jackson, unnerved, is easily overpowered. He is about to be hung but Olaf pleads for his life and through his influence the bad man is released. Parson Bill and Mary marry and later their child becomes a companion to Olaf.

Kriterion

And Percy Got Married—SANTA BARBARA.—Percy, who is a soda clerk, is very much in love, but has been thwarted in his attempts at marriage by his adored one's father. He hits upon a scheme to get some sleeping tablets and have his sweetheart put them in papa's coffee, so that they may elope. He finds that he has sent poison by mistake and rushes to the hospital, gets two doctors and an ambulance and goes for father. They get him, take him to the hospital and administer an antidote, much to his chagrin and disapproval. The daughter, however, had dropped the bottle and was unable to administer the drug. She finally sees Percy and explains the matter to him, after which they elope and are married. They return home and find father a very sick man as a result of his "cure," but he forgives them.

Goaded Jealousy—SANTA BARBARA—(Two REELS).—A husband's jealousy is aroused by the innocent actions of a friend. His rage increases when a telegram arrives from his wife's brother signed Jack, which is also the name of his friend. A number of minor incidents drive the husband into a state of frenzy and when the brother-in-law arrives a tragic ending seems certain but all is happily explained. One of the exceptional points in the story is that there is no villain introduced.

The Crystal Globe—PARAGON—(Two REELS).—Shiela is adopted by wealthy people while an infant and raised to womanhood by them. A self-made man is in love with her, but she feels that she does not care for him. A visit to a magician reveals her past life to her, showing her as a waif in the west. Convinced of the worthiness of her lover, she agrees to marry him. Dorothy Davenport featured.

Paramount

The Crucible—FAMOUS PLAYERS—(FIVE REELS)—DECEMBER 14.—Jean Fanshaw is brought up by her father as nearly like a boy as possible. When he dies her mother and sister cannot understand her, and continually ill treat her. One day when her sister especially provokes her, Jean picks up a sickle and threatens her with it. As a result of this prank she is placed in a reformatory. Here she meets Stella Wilkes, a notorious girl of the village, who welcomes her, as she plans to make her a part of her wicked life. She escapes from the reformatory and in the woods meets Craig Atwood, who persuades her to return and finish her term. Later she saves the matron in a riot among the girls which is led by Stella Wilkes and wins her release. Not being wanted at her sister's home she goes to the city, but Stella follows her and causes her to lose one position after another. At last she again meets the artist and promises to become his wife. Happiness is again snatched from her as the shadow of the reformatory looms over her, but at a great risk to herself she saves her sister's home. At last the happiness she deserves comes to her.

False Colours — BOSWORTH — (FOUR REELS)—DECEMBER 17.—A rare drama by Lois Weber is "False Colours." It is a skilled portrayal of type—the people who are ever sailing under false colors, though professing to be true to themselves. Lloyd Phillips, an actor in love with his wife, at her death abandons his child to the care of a grasping housekeeper and her husband, who for nineteen years appropriate the money sent by the exiled father for the support of his daughter. The daughter, driven by despair, runs away a few days before her father's return and in the end of the play achieves success by picking up the threads of her father's career. Interwoven in the drama is the silent love of the theater maid for the actor. Her daughter, Florence, unhappily marries the son of Phillips' housekeeper and is urged on by her husband's people to play the part of Phillips' daughter. The lie is discovered after Phillips has become deeply interested in his spurious daughter. They are brought together by the death of the girl's mother who sends her daughter on a mission to deliver to Phillips the lifelong tokens of her memories of him. Phillips Smalley, Lois Weber, Adele Farrington and Courtney Foote have the leading roles.

Sawyer

Without Hope — FLAMINGO — (FOUR REELS).—This is the prize comedy written by Elaine Sterne. Hope, a slavey in a restaurant is adopted by two maiden spinsters and taken to a summer resort by them. Witherill, an inventor, has perfected a formula for the manufacture of noiseless gunpowder, and while waiting for the government's approval goes to the same hotel with his daughter Irene. Van Alstyne, a writer in love with Irene goes to the same hotel and secures employment as a waiter in the hope of getting material for a story. La Belle, a political spy of a foreign government, with the aid of a bogus count endeavors to get Witherill in her toils and obtain the coveted formula through the intervention of Hope, who exposes the bogus count, and Van Alstyne prevents La Belle from poisoning the inventor. The foreign agents are frustrated and captured. Two love stories run through the film and both Irene and Hope are made happy in the end.

Hearts United — Liberty — (Four Reels).—Professor Dood invites Robert Harris, the son of an old college chum, to visit him and his daughter, Alma, it being the old man's wish that the young people marry. Robert dies of heart failure before starting on his journey and Haines, a gambler who resembles him, decides to impersonate him and win the girl and her father's fortune. His deception succeeds but Alma loves Joe, her father's chauffeur. Haines convinces her that Joe is married and she dismisses him. Joe, heartbroken, leaves for the northwest. Alma discovers the trick and persuades her father to take her to the same region, this being easy as the professor has always wanted to study the Indians in this section of the country. Haines disguises himself as a professor and manages to be near them. Joe, in the meantime saves Water Lily, the daughter of an Indian chief, from death. Haines attempts to kidnap Alma when they arrive in the wilds and almost succeeds, as he is aided by a band of outlaws. Joe defends her, however, and at a critical moment Water Lily and her father's Indians come to the rescue. Haines is killed and the outlaws captured. Alma and Joe are happily united.

United-Warner's

Little Miss Nuisance — Warner's—Paul Normond is engaged to the daughter of his employer, James Fauret of the Department of Special Revenue. With a friend he is spending a week-end at his cottage in the country when Marion Lamont, the daughter of a wealthy candy manufacturer, is forced to stop at their place because the tire of her automobile is punctured. Fauret and his daughter see the girl in Paul's cottage and denounce him. He follows them to the city and has things all straightened out again when Marion calls on him to express her sorrow for causing him trouble, for she has fallen in love with him. Fauret again finds them together and this time discharges Paul and tells him never to come near his daughter again. The daughter approves of her father's attitude, as she never cared very much for Paul and he, heart-broken, leaves for the battlefields. Marion learns of this and follows him as a Red Cross nurse. They meet again and this time they recognize each other's love.

Everyone—Warner's.—Everyone has enjoyed the excesses of life and now finds the specter of Death at his elbow. Death says that Everyone must come with him and the latter asks if he may take someone with him. This is agreeable to Death and Everyone sets out on his search. In turn he is refused by Good Fellowship, Kith and Kin, Riches and Good Deeds. At last he approaches Knowledge and finds a true friend. Knowledge, with strength and authority, frightens Death away and then leads Everyone along the pathway of life, showing him the folly of his former existence and bringing happiness to him. At last, after a life of peaceful splendor, Death again approaches, but not in a hideous form this time and Everyone smiles as his soul flees to higher spheres.

Puss in the Well—Starlight.—After warning her little daughter and her playmates to keep away from the well, the mother falls asleep and dreams that her children enact a melodrama with such realism that she awakes in terror. She then realizes that there is nothing wrong and that it was only a dream.

Doctor Killem's Dope—Premier.—Dr. Killem brings some "dope" to a lazy town and guarantees it to cure any malady, and when an old maid appeals to him for help, he sells her some of it. She has been having trouble with a suitor, but the "dope" soothes her temper and her lover accepts her.

The Man in Skirts—Superba.—The situation presented in this film deals with the entrance of a tramp into a henpecked husband's home, while the husband's place is being filled by a man who is in love with the henpecked one's wife. Slapstick comedy action holds sway throughout the reel. Charles De Forrest has the leading role.

Her Duplicate Husband — Features Ideal—(Three Reels).—A rich count leaves his wife to run away with an actress. The ship on which they are sailing is wrecked and the count alone survives, he being rescued by a passing ship which is commanded by convicts, who have arisen and overcome their guards. The count dies at sea and the convict-captain lets a surgeon make his face like that of the dead man. He then returns to France with one of his pals and eventually becomes reconciled to the count's wife, she thinking that it is her husband. An old servant woman appears at this point of the story, who knows that the count was guilty of the crime for which the convict, who now impersonates him, was sentenced. The servant has held her tongue, however, because of the count's mother, but with the death of this old lady, she demands of the "count" that the innocent man be released, not knowing that she is talking to that man himself. The surgeon turns up and blackmails the convict-count, and, at this point, a conflagration takes place in which the man loses his life. Thus passes the countess' "duplicate husband."

The films of all the companies are now being submitted to the National Board of Censorship and when approved by them bear official stamp which is shown above. Screen productions having been thus approved are certain to entertain an audience of any kind without offending even the most sensitive person present.

Universal Special

The Master Key—(Episode Five)—Universal—(Two Reels)—December 21. In the sixth episode of this serial Dore starts out on a search for Ruth. He finds the taxi driver that took Wilkerson, Drake, Mrs. Darnell, and the girl to Chinatown, and learns from him where the party got out. In the meantime the schemers have discovered that the deeds to the "Master Key" mine are not in Ruth's grip as they had supposed, and they send Drake back to the opium den in which the girl is imprisoned to obtain them from her. Dore and the hotel detective see him enter the place, and summon the police. Drake learns that Sing Wah has spirited Ruth away, and, undecided at first what action to take, his mind is soon made up when he catches a glimpse of the raiding squad. He manages to make a safe get-away, and returns to Wilkerson and Mrs. Darnell to report. Dore and the detective become trapped in the cylindrical room, and are dropped through a trap door into the water beneath the den. They make their way out into the bay, and, after a vigorous search and exciting chase, find the Chinaman and Ruth and rescue the girl.

World

The Marked Woman—Shubert—(Five Reels)—December 14.—Olga Petcoff, a nihilist, vows vengeance on the Cossacks when her little sister is run over by Count Bobrikoff. She is sent to China with an important paper hidden in the heel of her shoe, which denounces the Russian Ambassador. On her voyage she meets Lieutenant Dare of the United States navy and they fall in love. On her arrival in Port Arthur she finds the Russian police in charge of the Nihilist headquarters, but is saved from being sent to Siberia by the Russian Ambassador, who sends her to Kan You Way at Nankin. On her way there the junk, in which she is traveling, is wrecked and Olga is found on the shore and taken to the house of Kan You Way. Here she meets Prince Ching prime minister to the Empress Dowager, and eventually is forced to marry him to save Dare and the Russian Ambassador from being put to death. Four years later her son is born. Dare spends most of his time seeking her, but is unsuccessful in his efforts. Kan You Way who has been thrown into prison by Prince Ching is liberated by Olga and tells the American forces of her whereabouts. Dare and a force of marines attack the palace successfully. He finds Olga and her boy, who is later killed by a bullet unintentionally fired by his father, Prince Ching. The ending is artistically incomplete.

Miscellaneous

The War Pigeon—ALL RED FEATURE COMPANY.—Crandall a renegade Canadian becomes a spy for the American troops and forces his daughter Alice to help him. The information is conveyed to the army by carrier pigeons. Lieutenant Fitzgibbons, commander of a band of Canadian scouts, discovers the method by which the enemy is kept informed. He meets Alice and they fall in love. Later she learns of the plot to capture Fitzgibbons and a conflict takes place within her between her love for her father and the lieutenant. With the assistance of a faithful Indian she manages to warn Fitzgibbons, and in the fight which follows his band is victorious. Crandall is taken a prisoner, but is released through Fitzgibbon's influence and the lieutenant claims Alice as his wife.

Should A Woman Divorce?—IVAN—(FIVE REELS).—The daughter of an American farmer brings home a school girl friend. The contrast between the two girls is marked, but despite the fact that the farmer's daughter is the most sensible of the two she marries a worthless man. He gambles and drinks and spends the majority of his time with other women, and her only comfort is a daughter which is born to them. She goes to her former lover who is a doctor and he persuades her to run away with him, though she says her husband will never consent to a divorce. The doctor changes his name and tells the world that she is his wife. He becomes a famous physician and they are happy when their home is blessed with a child. Her first child who has been kept by the worthless man is taken sick and the famous physician is called in. When the woman and her second child enter the office the secret is found out. This is the beginning of a tragedy which does not even end when the doctor dies.

The Little Girl That He Forgot—COSMOS—(FIVE REELS).—June Holly, an orphan, lives with her uncle and grandmother in the timber district of Missouri. David Stone loves June and Bud Uptergraft, whom she has rejected, hates her. Alan Powell, the son of a wealthy St. Louis lumber merchant comes to the forest and falls in love with June but when he sees that David suspects them he says that he only flirted with her, thus protecting her reputation. Soon after Alan is called home but writes June telling her that he will return and marry her as soon as he has completed a business trip he is starting on. David gets the letter and destroys it. Her child is born and she goes in search of Alan but to no avail. While going along a country road she drops the baby and it dies in a few moments. Frightened, she hides it in the bushes but she is discovered and arrested. She is tried and convicted for murder. Alan returns and learns of her trouble. He pleads with the governor to stay her execution but the official refuses and everything points to her hanging until, at the last moment before her execution, the governor sees things in a different light and pardons her. She finds happiness in Alan's arms.

dale and determine to secure them, as it is their duty to bring all such things to the service of their nation. Both men reject offers for their inventions and the society then plans to secure them without their consent. Rex Omar, a detective, overhears their plans and attends their meeting. He is discovered and condemned to have his head cut off by the sword-shaped hand of a clock but is rescued through the mystic powers of Lahlu, a hypnotic medium. A week later the society succeeds in stealing Clydesdale's invention with the aid of a drugged newspaper but again Lahlu's powers are called into play and Omar learns the whereabouts of the Chinamen and secures the invention, the society members, however, escaping. They use the same means of securing Dr. Wyncott's invention they did for Clydesdale's but this time Omar succeeds in capturing them and the two men feel that they are safe at last.

The Queen of Counterfeiters—Apex—(Three Reels).—The queen of counterfeiters is a beautiful young woman who controls a band of thieves. Her confederates complete a $5,000 bill and she passes it at the race track, an elderly gentleman being her victim. When he tries to dispose of it he is arrested but to the surprise of the police he removes his disguise and they see he is Nick Carter, the famous detective. He leads a raid on the crooks' den but is trapped and thrown into the river after being tied in a sack. He escapes and when he learns that they are leaving for a cruise around the world he stows himself away in their ship. He captures one of the gang and forces him to change clothes and thus manages to follow the queen to her hotel when they reach a port. He then disguises as an elderly gentleman and takes her to a ball. As they part for the night he discloses his identity to her and places her under arrest.

Press Agent Says—

That Charles Ray of the New York Motion Picture Corporation bears a charmed life. He had his eleventh automobile accident in two years recently, when another machine skidded and collided with him, damaging his auto quite badly. In not one of these mishaps has the fault been Ray's and only twice has he had to pay for the repairs. He has paid a couple of fines but that is another story.

That Elizabeth Burbridge, ingenue with the Ince companies, declares she is going to write a book when she gets time, in which she intends to narrate the countless incidents that have happened since she began to work before the cameras of the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

That in the "Olive is Dismissed" episode in "Olive's Opportunities," in which Miss Mabel Trunnelle is being featured by Edison, appears a dog "party" given by a society woman. The dogs, seated around the table are supposed to show their enjoyment by howling their delight.

That being arrested as a military spy in Long Beach, California, taken to the city prison and subjected to a "third degree" ordeal of questioning, was the experience of Carl von Pagh-Winther, a camera man in the employ of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company of Long Beach, who is known in California moving picture circles as "the baron."

That Earl Metcalfe, at the Lubin studio recently, "put one over" on George Terwilliger, his director, by announcing to him that he was going to quit acting and become a scenario writer. When asked for an explanation Metcalfe said that he knew of a book which if put into scenario form, would make the greatest moving picture in the world. Being a noted scenario writer himself, and wondering how this book had ever escaped his notice, Terwilliger immediately inquired the name of it. With all appearances of seriousness Earl replied, "The dictionary, because in it one can find every element for a good photoplay—love, hate, jealousy, pity, sympathy, scorn, forgiveness, comedy,—." The list was never completed for Terwilliger fled to his private office. From last reports Earl is still alive.

That Mary Fuller of Universal has no fear of the chilling blasts which sweep the summit of the Palisades on the banks of the Hudson river. She proved this recently when she stood in a rocky hollow clad in a very flimsy garment of leaves and grass, while a gale swept the crest of the Jersey heights.

That one of Billie Ritchie's friends has nicknamed him, "dispeller of blues." An exceedingly appropriate title, for his funny manoeuvers.

That the Flying "A" is mighty proud of having a prize baby in its family circle in the small person of little Jack Morrison, the tiny son of Mr. and Mrs. Chick Morrison, who won over all contestants in the recent eugenic exhibition.

That Ben Turpin, Essanay comedian, is mourning the loss of his pet mule, which has taken part in so many Essanay comedies. The animal finally became too old to take his parts well so had to be put in the "has-been" class. It was retired to a farm on a pension. Turpin visits the animal every Sunday.

That when Grace Cunard was getting ready to dress as the Scotch girl in "The Campbells Are Coming" and opened the boxes sent by the costumers, who made the clothes specially, she found stockings, two pairs of breast plates and a black jacket. The balance of the clothes had been forgotten. Miss Cunard says, "Francis Ford absolutely refused to allow me to go on with what was sent!"

That William D. Taylor, who is producing for Carlyle Blackwell of the Favorite Players, says that he never had such an easy man to direct before. He did not think it possible for a man to grasp things as quickly as Carlyle does. On the other hand, Mr. Blackwell pays tribute to his director who is the first man to handle him in the manner Taylor does.

That J. Barney Sherry, the popular veteran character actor of the Inceville forces, appeared at the studio last week wearing another new suit. It is understood from an authoritative source that this constitutes Barney's fiftieth addition to his private wardrobe since the beginning of the summer.

That pretty Louise Glaum will soon be added to the list of automobile owners and ride to and from Inceville and Los Angeles. Louise has a difficulty however, she wants a "pretty" car and refuses to consider such trifling matters as power or durability. She has been persuaded to let one or two rabid autobugs help her select the machine but it has got to be a "pretty" car, and that is all there is to it.

The Perils of Pauline

If we could only take you round and have you talk to the exhibitors who have been running this great serial you would not hesitate a minute. You would book it as they did and see your box-office receipts increase, too. Pauline has proved to be the biggest money-pulling picture ever put out by any firm. It has created such a stir throughout the country both on account of the newspaper publicity and on account of the intrinsic value of the story, that it has been an enormous money-maker for the exhibitors showing it. Some of the theatres have been requested to issue reserve seat tickets for the days they show Pauline, so that the patrons could be sure in advance that they would get in to see it. There have been many disappointed people who have gone to the theatres and have found such a crowd waiting they could not get in. Do you need any better evidence that it will be a money-maker for you, too?

Pauline Pulls People—She's A Gold Mine

Giants-White Sox World Tour

You have to hand it to Jack Gleason. The pictures he had taken by the Pathé camera man on the trip around the world are the most interesting travel pictures we have ever seen. Wonderful scenery, historical places and events, comical situations, thrilling adventures, interesting plays, notable men and perfect photography are all shown in such a way that your patrons will vote this picture the greatest they have ever seen. It is a fact that there has never before been an opportunity to get such a wonderful collection of events and place them before the public in one picture. Add to this the fact that every newspaper in the country has run column after column about the trip and you have a combination that is unbeatable. It is a foregone conclusion that this will prove the biggest money-puller you have ever had in your theatre. This is proved by the great number of telegraphic requests we have had for bookings. To get an early run you will have to hurry and place your order with one of the Eclectic branch exchanges or wire the head office direct.

"The Cream of American and European Studios"

The Stain

(6 Parts)

Here is one of the most wonderful dramatic tragedies ever placed on the screen. Made for us by Pathé from a dramatization of the famous novel by Forrest Halsey and Robert H. Davis. The action is intense. The acting is superb. The story is entrancing. The tragic fall of the clerk and the final reckoning when he is faced with the proof of what danger and suffering his action has caused create a situation which calls for the very best artists to depict. These artists are some of the best known in the motion picture world and insure the quality of the picture.

The Lion's Bride

(3 Parts)

Did you ever feel the hair on your head slowly rise as you felt there was something going to happen, something which you had no power to avert and which would mean a terrible danger to the participants? Well here you have it. Madame Emmy Destinn, the great operatic Prima Donna, enters a cage containing fourteen lions and sings a selection from one of her songs. While she is singing one of the beasts springs on the piano and is within a few feet of the singer through the song. This is a thriller if there ever has been one.

Sole American Distributers of the "GUIL PASTIL"

NO METHOD THAT WE KNOW would build up so great a business in repair supplies, as the sale of a machine made of lead composition parts, but we prefer the good will and continuous benefit that will result from the sale of a machine made with a rigid iron, dust-proof frame, and solid steel parts, such as is found in the 1914 Motiograph, to be seen AT DAYTON, during the convention beginning July 6th. Let us show you the hardened parts, the wearing qualities, the excellent Arc Lamp, and the reasons why the Motiograph is the machine to buy.

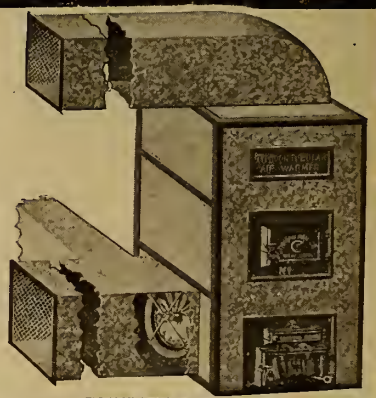
Cooling Ventilation Heating

TYPHOON MULTIBLADE BLOWER "Patented"
Made in sizes from 12 inches to 12 feet



"TYPHOON BLOW-IN SYSTEM" has revolutionized the ventilating problem. You get in front of a desk fan to keep cool, not in back. Apply this common sense and blow the air in.

Don't waste money experimenting with exhaust fans.

The TYPHOON MULTIBLADE BLOWER will force air right through ordinary exhaust fans. Reversed, the air can be exhausted as well.

Our Catalogue M. P. tells how to keep cool in summer and warm in winter.

The Divine Shakespearean Drama

MADE AT VENICE, ITALY!!!

By the Photo Drama Company. THE SUPER FILM — By All Odds the Most Pretentious, Beautiful and Accurately Screened Version of Shakespearean Stories.

MADE AT VENICE, ITALY! That's a Tremendous Advertising Feature in Itself. VENICE, rendesvouz of the modern tourist—a very fountain-head of Romance and Adventure! The waterways of Historic Venice with its tales, ten centuries old, of Passionate Loves and Fierce Vendettas—the indolent, dreamy sweep of these Gondola-ridden highways are scenes of the quaintest stories in any language.

FOR THE MAKING OF OTHELLO the City Fathers Declared a Half-Holiday—Canals were Closed to Modern Commerce, Leaving Only the Aged Palaces, the Gayly Costumed Players and the Clicking Cameras of the Photo Drama Company.

In OTHELLO, we offer a real masterpiece—it is the first of Shakespeare's stories filmed in its proper environment, as the Master would have wished.

Read These Comments:

"HARRY CAREY, in the role of the gentleman burglar, is incomparahle. There are crook and crook plays, but seldom has there heen a story which embodies so many startling situations and real thrills." —Morning Telegraph.

The story is well developed, interesting and finely acted by the company in support of Mr. Carey.
—Dramatic Mirror.

Any State Right huyer that is fortunate enough to get this feature will make some real money with it.
—New York Star.

"'THE MASTER CRACKSMAN' makes a good movie story and rounds out the kind of action and interest that the American picture audiences glory in. Photographically the picture is there. 'The Master Cracksman' will hold its own." —Variety.

"Undoubtedly one of the finest melodramas yet produced. It is a good picture, a thoroughly worthy attempt, sufficiently good to do honor to any house in which it may he shown. Harry Carey possesses technique and skill."

"MOTION PICTURE WORK"

By DAVID S. HULFISH

618 Pages, Including Index

Price $4.00

THIS BOOK is invaluable for reference and instruction to the thousands of workers in the motion picture field. Covers fully the three big branches of the motion picture business; the making of the pictures, the operation of all standard types of projecting machines, and the operation of the moving picture theater. The drawings, diagrams, and photographs used have been prepared especially for this work and their instructive value is as great as the text itself.

"30 FAMOUS FEATURES A YEAR"

"FOOLING FANNY'S FATHER"—Comedy. Tuesday, July 7th

Father is working on a contrivance to advance or reverse a person's age, but Fanny and her sweetheart show him that it won't work.

"WHILE AUNTIE BOUNCED"—Comedy. Tuesday, July 7th

Auntie tries to stop the courting between Alice and a Circus Acrobat, but they throw her in the bounding net until she consents.

"THE INCOMPETENT"—Two Reel Drama. Wednesday, July 8th

A very intense drama. A story of a worthless man, a devoted wife and excellent friend, the fatal triangle which causes a tragedy followed by a new era of happiness.

"THE DEBT"—Two Reel Drama. Thursday, July 9th

Some sad experiences in the life of a poor but worthy chorus girl who becomes the victim of a rich old roue, but eventually is saved by a heroic and worthy lover.

"THE TRIBUNAL OF CONSCIENCE"—Drama. Friday, July 10th

Unfortunate career of a spendthrift son who being discarded by his excellent father robs the safe and goes headlong to ruin and poverty, eventually he reforms and a faithful old servant secures a reconciliation and prosperity.

"HOW HE LOST HIS TROUSERS"—Comedy. Saturday, July 11th

Excellent comedy picture in which a young swell friend calling on his chum's family is mistaken for an escaped lunatic. He is deprived of his pants and has to escape dressed in a lamp shade.

"MANDY'S CHICKEN DINNER"—Comedy. Saturday, July 11th

Mandy invites the preacher to dinner and gives her trifling husband money to buy a chicken but through his clumsiness the rooster gets away. The husband then robs a poultry farm, which causes a sad mix up.

LUBIN MASTERPIECES

Lubin Masterpieces are eagerly sought and well advertised by Exhibitors, because of their tremendous drawing power. This drawing power has been thoroughly established from the painstaking efforts always noticed in Lubin pictures, together with the lavish expenditure necessary to produce and maintain the standard which we have set.

The first requisite is a good play then the carefully selected cast and bearing those two important points in mind, the list below will conclusively prove that we are now in a position to offer

"Broadway's Best Successes with Broadway's Best Stars"

Now Ready and About to Be Released

"THE WOLF" by Eugene Walter—5 Reels, with the Famous Lubin All Star Cast. As beautiful a picture as was ever made.

"MICHAEL STROGOFF" — 5 Reels, with Jacob P. Adler, the Eminent Romantic Actor, in the leading Roll.

"THE HOUSE NEXT DOOR"—5 Reels, with the Famous Lubin All Star Cast.

The Big Drury Lane and Broadway Successes

By Cecil Raleigh

"SPORTING LIFE," "THE GREAT RUBY," "THE GREAT MILLIONAIRE."

"THE COLLEGE WIDOW" by George Ade, the humor dispenser.

"THE DESERTERS," by Robert Payton Carter.

"LOVERS' LANE" and "THE CLIMBERS," by Clyde Fitch.

"THE CIPHER CODE" and "DR. BELKNAP" by Charles Klein, author of "Third Degree," "Lion and the Mouse," "The Gamblers" and "Daughters of Men"—already produced by Lubin, with wonderful success.

"MRS. DANE'S DEFENSE" by Henry Arthur Jones.

Famous and Popular Plays Now in Preparation

"THE EAGLE'S NEST" (Now being produced in Colorado) written by Edwin Arden, who made a great success in this play for years and who now plays the important role in the photoplay.

"THE FORTUNE HUNTER" by Winchell Smith with Wm. Elliott, late star of "Madame X" production, in the leading role.

"THE RAGGED EARL" by Joseph Humphries and Ernest Lacey. With Andrew Mack in the leading role.

"RAYMOND HITCHCOCK," the funniest man on the stage in a specially written Comedy which promises to be the funniest Motion Picture yet produced.

Future Productions with Well Known Broadway Stars

"THE SPORTING DUCHESS" by Cecil Raleigh. With the remarkable racing scene taken on a large and expensive scale.

"THE GREAT DIVIDE" by Wm. Vaughn Moody. Henry Miller's and Margaret Anglin's great success.

What kind of features do you want?

Read this letter from a man who knows

During the big exposition in New York a number of the great six reel Warner's Features were shown. The president of the International Motion Picture Association, Mr. Charles H. Phillips, saw them, and upon his return home wrote the following letter:—

Milwaukee, Wis., June 16, 1914.

Mr. P. A. Powers, President,
Warner's Features, Incorporated,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—

Through the kindness of Mr. Samuel H. Trigger, New York, I had the pleasure of viewing several of your six-reel productions, and I consider these features among the best that have been produced in this country. With best wishes for your future success, I am

Most respectfully yours,
(Signed) CHARLES H. PHILLIPS,
President, International Motion Picture Ass'n.

When feature films command praise from such a source, it is time for you to investigate. WARNER'S FEATURES have the appeal that fills houses—the "punch" that builds business—the quality that spells success.

Film Quality

Quality in the film—quality from a technical photographic standpoint is as important to the Exhibitor as is interest in the story that the film tells.

There's one film that's recognized the world over as the standard of quality—that is always used by those whose effort it is to give the Exhibitors the very best goods and the very best service—Eastman film.

And it is identifiable. Look for "Eastman" on the perforated margin.

The Greatest Publishing Stunt In the Motion Picture World

The American Motion Picture Cyclopedic Directory

Suppose You Wanted to Know—

The names, addresses and owners of motion picture theatres in one or more cities of the United States—

Or full detailed information as to any of the various film manufacturing concerns—

Or the names and addresses of the various exchanges—

Or the names and addresses of the various accessory people—

Or the names and addresses of all motion picture players in this country—

Or the manufacturers of commercial and educational films—

Or the laws and ordinances regulating the production of motion pictures throughout this country—

Or any other information relating to the motion picture industry.

Where would you find it?

Where would the information be available INSTANTLY?

Answer: In the American Motion Picture Directory, the standard cyclopedic digest of the motion picture world, and the only publication of its kind in the world.

No matter what you want to know regarding this great industry will be found between the covers of this directory, the most thorough, elaborate and valuable directory published in behalf of any industry in the United States.

It is no longer necessary to grope around in the dark as heretofore for information relative to the motion picture industry, because now every branch, every possible phase of this great industry is summarized and epitomized in the American Motion Picture Directory—"the bible of the industry."

Information heretofore unavailable, or, if available, at great expense and delay, is now at your fingers' tips.

Everything that you might want to know about the motion picture industry will be found in this Cyclopedic Directory which we are now publishing at an enormous expense. It answers every question as to the industry itself and furnishes mailing lists and data heretofore unavailable except at a large expense.

No industry on earth will have a better representation in a directory line than the motion picture industry when the first volume of this directory is completed. It will be to the motion picture industry what the Encyclopaedia Britannica is to the student—the source of every available bit of reliable information relating to the subject under investigation.

It will be on the desk of every film manufacturer, producer, exhibitor and accessory man in the country, and also in all public libraries, leading book stores, municipal libraries, city attorneys' offices and every reference library throughout the country. It is the epitome of the motion picture world, the only standard reference guide book o its kind in existence.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL

FIRST IN WAR FIRST IN PEACE FIRST IN POPULARITY

"REPORTER JIMMIE INTERVENES."

IN TWO REELS—RELEASED JULY 6th.

A big, telling, trenchant, up-to-date newspaper story of an attempted municipal franchise steal.—How the reporter gave the "once over" to the man higher up—scored the big beat, and won a wife, is a swift, moving and absorbing entertainment.

"ALGIE'S SISTER."

RELEASED JULY 7th.

A city boy is marooned on a ranch, and the cowboys have great game with him. He outwits his tormentors by introducing a female impersonator as his sister. A cow-puncher comedy with a big lilt.

"CARYL OF THE MOUNTAINS."

RELEASED JULY 8th.

A moonshiner, anxious to win a mountain-maiden, tries to catch her through fear by starting the story that her father is a "revenuer." The real villain is caught and the girl is won by the man of her heart. Featuring KATHLYN WILLIAMS and THOMAS SANTSCHI.

"DID SHE CURE HIM?"

RELEASED JULY 10th.

The husband loves cards, clubs and conviviality, but his husky wife gives him "the fruit cure" until he is almost foundered.—A roar from start to finish.

"HIS FIGHT."

RELEASED JULY 11th.

A faithless, but fascinating wife is divorced by her husband, and comes to grief through another marriage. She tries to win the former back but fails.—A surprising story with big hearthold.

"THE WILDERNESS MAIL."

A Story of Love and Adventure With a Great 2-Reel Drama of the Northwest. Great Tragedy.

By James Oliver Curwood. Featuring Bessie Eyton.

RELEASED JULY 13th.

Produced amid the snows of the far Northwest with dog teams, snow banks, etc.—A remarkably strong and gripping story most decidedly acceptable to the public. 2 reels.

"AN EGYPTIAN PRINCESS."

RELEASED JULY 14th.

A delightful and happy comedy depicting the adventures of a chemist who attempts to bring an Egyptian mummy to life,—involving a jealous wife and a succession of shriekingly funny situations.

"HIS LAST APPEAL."

RELEASED JULY 15th.

Depicting the struggle of an ex-convict to decide between right and wrong when it came to a question of forging the Governor's signature to a reprieve to save his employer from death until explanations could be made.—All ends happily.—IN TWO REELS.

"WIGGS TAKES THE REST CURE."

RELEASED JULY 17th.

The story of a victim of insomnia who wishes to find relief.—His adventures with a runaway automobile and a desperate robber, whom he finally captures, cure him.

"THE SQUATTERS."

RELEASED JULY 18th.

The story of a society girl who forms a friendship for the Junoesque daughter of a squatter, and their adventures in keeping peace between an irate land holder and the settlers. Full of dramatic incidents.

We Promised to Put Out the Greatest Serial Film Ever Produced. WE DID IT.

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

still continues its unprecedented success. Pauline is making more friends daily. In fact so great has become the demand for this serial that many of the exhibitors who at first booked for only one day of each episode are demanding two and sometimes three days' use so that they can take care of all their patrons who are Pauline fans. There is such an intensely interesting quality combined with some of the most unusual, almost superhuman achievements in this serial that it makes new friends of everyone who sees it. There's a reason—

The Adventure of the Absent-Minded Professor

By FREDERIC ARNOLD KUMMER

Seventh story of "Octavius—Amateur Detective." By courtesy of "Pictorial Review."
Comedy—About 1000 Feet

This seventh adventure of "Octavius" (Barry O'Moore) places him in a most awkward situation in the domestic circle of Professor Harper, whither he had gone on special request to ferret out a series of thefts of bric-a-brac and curios from the Professor's drawing room. The situation is made still more embarrassing by a case of mistaken identity by which the Professor's own daughter is charged with the thefts, rather than the maid who had impersonated her. The discovery of the real culprit is the climax to the exciting story.

There is a thrilling touch, an artistic value to Eclectic features which gives them that added something necessary to make them stand head and shoulders above the ordinary so-called features. Eclectic features make friends wherever shown.

5 Parts WHEN ROME RULED 5 Parts

This is an exceptionally strong dramatic story of the trials of the early christians in the land controlled by the priests of the gods worshipped by the Romans. The story has different plot to any other and is rich in situations that will make your patrons sit up and take notice. Especially is this true where the lion jumps down from the rocks and carries off a live sheep from the herd. This is a Pathe made drama featuring some of the best Pathe artists in a very beautiful scenic and historical feature.

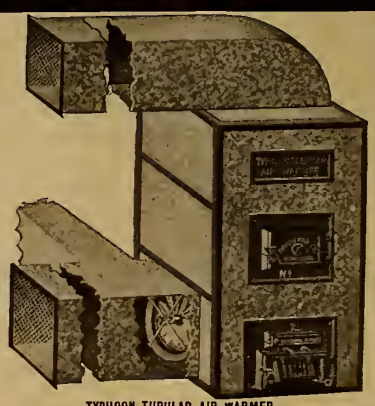
Cooling Ventilation Heating

TYPHOON MULTIBLADE BLOWER "Patented" Made in sizes from 12 inches to 12 feet



"TYPHOON BLOW-IN SYSTEM" has revolutionized the ventilating problem. You get in front of a desk fan to keep cool, not in back. Apply this common sense and blow the air in.

Don't waste money experimenting with exhaust fans.

The TYPHOON MULTIBLADE BLOWER will force air right through ordinary exhaust fans. Reversed, the air can be exhausted as well.

Our Catalogue M. P. tells how to keep cool in summer and warm in winter.

"MOTION PICTURE WORK"

By DAVID S. HULFISH

618 Pages, Including Index

Price $4.00

THIS BOOK is invaluable for reference and instruction to the thousands of workers in the motion picture field. Covers fully the three big branches of the motion picture business; the making of the pictures, the operation of all standard types of projecting machines, and the operation of the moving picture theater. The drawings, diagrams, and photographs used have been prepared especially for this work and their instructive value is as great as the text itself.

Film Quality

Quality in the film—quality from a technical photographic standpoint is as important to the Exhibitor as is interest in the story that the film tells.

There's one film that's recognized the world over as the standard of quality—that is always used by those whose effort it is to give the Exhibitors the very best goods and the very best service—Eastman film.

And it is identifiable. Look for "Eastman" on the perforated margin.

Is Pauline Working for You?

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

The remarkable thing about this most remarkable of all remarkable films is that Pauline's Perils get more perilous as they go along.

A hot pace was set in the early episodes. The reason this serial keeps drawing more people all the time, is that Pauline not only keeps up with the original pace—but she goes way beyond it.

PAULINE PULLS PEOPLE—SHE'S A GOLD MINE

This is the Life — Whiskers

One reel American Pathe made comedies.

Quick moving, fast furious action.

Both these reels are patron-pullers—they are the sort that bring people back the next week for more of the same kind.

THE CORSAIR

Pathe made, 4 parts

Featuring Crane Wilbur in the leading role, supported by Edward Jose and an all star cast.

Based on Lord Byron's great story of the same name. Full of mystery and sunshine of the Mediterranean and the magnetic influence of a beautiful slave girl for whom men gladly risk their lives and lose them. Action, action—corsairs, harems, battles, raids, escapes and treasure caves, a truly Arabian Night's adventure, while through it all there runs the influence of the irresistible Greek girl Medora. A plot of exceptional strength, a setting of alluring Orientalism, and a story which breathes with the first screening and fairly pants at the climax.

WHEN A WOMAN LOVES

In this film are introduced some new players, among them is an actress in the leading part who is an exceptional "find." She will take your patrons' hearts by storm—she will, without doubt, be one of the greatest actresses ever offered to the moving picture public. Look for her—she is in "When a Woman Loves."

THE BOUNDARY RIDER

Featuring Thurlow Bergen in the leading role

A dramatic five part attraction of the Revenue service and the North woods. An exciting story with a new sort of hero, a former broker's clerk whose employer becomes involved with opium smugglers and is killed. Suspicion falls on the clerk who is obliged to flee to Canada where he joins the force of fearless boundary riders. From the lawless opium smugglers of New York to the wild free life of the northern boundary riders this film is an accurate depiction of inside facts and has more thrills per foot than any detective play in recent years.

Motiograph Satisfaction

What is there about the MOTIOGRAPH that makes MOTIOGRAPH owners so loyal, so enthusiastic? You will have to admit their feeling is different, unusual, remarkable, compared with the exhibitor's satisfaction with other make machines. NOW WHY? The answer is worth knowing if you are seeking the best machine made. Talk with a hundred MOTIOGRAPH owners using the different models from the beginning many years ago. They will all tell you.

"My Motiograph runs always. I can always depend on it. Such a thing as a machine failing to run or break down or wear out, never enters my mind. From what my friends tell me I know it costs me less to run and maintain my Motiograph than they pay out for the machines of other makes, and I notice they all come to see my machine in operation when they want to buy and will ask, 'Will you buy another Motiograph?' Yes, when I buy my next machine, but I'm not in any hurry about it, my Motiograph is as sound and serviceable as any machine on the market today, regardless of its several years service."

That is what Motiograph users will tell you if you ask them. After all, that is what you want to buy—Satisfaction—no matter what you have in mind to spend, put in Motiograph Satisfaction and you will get your money's worth.

Perriton Escapes the Detective Through the Partition Into Mary Wales' Stateroom

THE LIVING DEAD

Ninth Story in "The Man Who Disappeared" series

A drama by RICHARD WASHBURN CHILD

When John Perriton and Mary Wales fled to Albany to escape the detective who sought to arrest Perriton on a supposed murder charge, they planned to escape across the border to Montreal. Finding this futile they took the river boat back to New York and supposed they were safe, till at supper on the boat the detective spied them and ordered Perriton locked up in his stateroom. How he escaped through the partition into Mary's room adjoining and then jumped overboard and finally landed in New York safe and sound is an exciting episode. Released August 4th—1000 feet.

The Perils of Pauline

Serial stories are an old standby for building up magazine circulation.

"The Perils of Pauline" is a film serial complete in each episode, which will build up your theatre attendance just as the popular serial stories increase the circulation of a magazine.

Pauline is already well known and those who see her once always want more—a Pauline poster at your door is your surest and biggest puller.

Pauline Puts Profits in your Pocket.

Colonel Heeza Liar

Everyone knows the Colonel, a comedy cartoon character originated by the celebrated J. R. Bray. With this release he takes a mirth-provoking trip up "The River of Doubt" which leaves his other exploits as only mildly funny.

Get Out and Get Under

The Masked Motive

A dramatic masterpiece in 5 parts distinguished by exceptional acting and an amazing though readily intelligible intricacy of Plot. Two happy marriages are made unhappy by the scheming of a disappointed suitor who carries his revenge even to the children of the unfortunate double alliance. He nearly gets away with it when—well any way it has you guessing.

All Love Excelling

Featuring Crane Wilbur and Eleanor Woodruff

American Pathe Made in 3 Parts

The story of a woman who loves a man better than her own happiness. A demonstration of devotion which extends even to the second generation and a heroic sacrifice in which she saves the man from folly and his son from death and disappointment. From Washington through the Crimean War—a stirring series of events and unexpected actions which is sure to awaken the sympathies of your patrons.

The Perils of Pauline

Pauline's a "glad-hand" girl. She's the most familiar figure in film-life. Why not let her run a reception in your theatre? Because of her big reputation and her excellent press work and paper she gets people in. Because of her absorbing interest she keeps 'em there. Because of the memory of a good time she brings 'em back to see her again. She's the most delightful and popular hostess that ever welcomed a crowd of patrons.

New release every other Monday—each complete—each gets across and goes a little further than the last.

The Siren

A dramatic tragedy in six parts, wherein a foolish woman makes fools of men, foolish and otherwise. Delighting in her unaccountable power over the opposite sex, she flits like butterfly from man to man leaving blight and family desolation behind her. From noblemen to fishermen, and even her own husband, is added to the list of dazzled ones, until from the trail of tragedy behind her there springs a sudden ending to her own career. The story is as fascinating as the heroine.

Nick Winter
and
The Lost Prince

3 Reel Comedy Drama which continues the adventures of the screen's most resourceful detective.

Failure for Nick Winter is just a starter on a hundred other trails. His ingenuity in devising schemes for circumventing the criminals is only approched by the resourcefulness of the law-breakers in planning traps for the overthrow of the great detective. Only those who have seen him can appreciate his remarkable ability and the fertility of his brain. Nobody in film-life can do so many different things so many different ways as he can—he's funny too.

Eclectic's 4-a-Week

MONDAY—The Perils of Pauline, every two weeks. Short Subjects alternate weeks.
TUESDAY—American one or two reel comedy.
WEDNESDAY—Super-excellent multiple reel production.
FRIDAY—Surpassing attraction of several reels.

Press Proclaims Peple's Play Powerful!

WAR DRAMA THRILLS CHICAGO

"THE LITTLEST REBEL" Scores Big Success in Western Metropolis

The Photoplay Critics of the Chicago Tribune and Chicago Herald Tell in Part of the Great Realism that Thrills the Spectator who Witnesses the Projection of "THE LITTLEST REBEL"

CHICAGO TRIBUNE

"LITTLEST REBEL" THRILLING

By KITTY KELLY

If the Austrians and Servians and other craving war continentals could just drop into the Studebaker for a couple of hours to watch the unreeling of "The Littlest Rebel," they would get an optical dose of war horror sufficient to drive them to hang up their guns and take their plowshares and fall instantly to tilling the soil.

This picture, made out of the little prose war epic Edward Peple wrote several years ago, which also supplied heart interest for a successful play, is most effective as war propaganda in its film form, for what it lacks in direct intellectual appeal of the book and voice and personal magnetism of the stage it makes up in its broader scope of vizualization, creating a vivid and inescapable impression of the inglorious underside of brute contest between humans dignified by the name of war.

CHICAGO HERALD

"LITTLEST REBEL" EXCITING FILM PLAY

By THE HATTONS

The film drama seems to make its most vital appeal when it combines history and spectacle. We felt this keenly after witnessing "The Littlest Rebel" yesterday at the Studebaker Theatre. With characters more or less known to the audiences and broad backgrounds reflecting some of the traditional spectacle of the civil war, THIS "MOVIE" PLAY HAS AN APPEAL PARALLEL TO THAT WHICH HAS MADE "CABIRIA" UNIQUE.

And for the first time we saw a "movie" audience applaud scenes as people do when their emotions are touched in the regular theatre.

WAR NEWS

Bringing the War Home

WATCH the crowds in front of a war bulletin. Are they eager? Do you think you would get much business from them if you could set up a telescope that would reach to Europe and show all the events of the war as they happen? You can bet you would—folks will cling to a church steeple all day to see the smoke of a distant battle. You can show the war in Europe right in your theatre with

THE PATHÉ DAILY NEWS

Safely seated inside your patrons can view the manouvers of the Kaiser's army, the Kaiser himself, the British warships in action, all the crowned heads that are at present participating in this mightiest of world conflicts and many of the heads which are crowned only with glory. They can see the actual men who are fighting and the actual places they are fighting about, and they can see them fighting. Will they want to see it? Put out a PATHE DAILY NEWS poster and you will find very soon that people do want to see the war news—more people than you can accommodate. Pathe Daily News issued semi-weekly.

War Extra

Eclectic Film Company, 110 West 40th Street, New York City

Faithful Unto Death

France and Germany at War

A pulsing story of the Franco-Prussian War in 4 parts. Vivid battle scenes which show the bitter, long suppressed hatred between Europe's greatest rivals, and connected with the pathetic story of a woman's sacrifice to aid her nation. 1-3-6 and 24 sheet posters.

NAPOLEON

The World's Greatest Warrior Changes the Map of Europe.

The meteoric career of Napoleon and his defiance to the whole world—pictured with historical accuracy and modern-day interest in 5 reels. Significant scenes from the last great struggle for European supremacy which can easily be compared with the crucial happenings of today. 1, 3 and 6-sheet posters.

How Max Went Around the World and Picturesque Auvergne

A split reel which combines the laughable efforts of Max with the beautiful scenic effects in natural colors of Auvergne, that tranquil, sun-bathed valley of France which, in all probability, is soon to be devastated by the inroads of the invading German troops.

Eclectics—4-a-week

MONDAY—The Perils of Pauline, every two weeks—short subjects alternate weeks.

TUESDAY—American 1 or 2 reel comedy.

WEDNESDAY—Super-excellent multiple reel production.

FRIDAY—Surpassing attraction of several reels.

War News at a Glance

Germany is fighting the world. War is uppermost in the minds of men

The Eclectic Film Co. presents a number of multiple reel war features dealing with the very nations today engaged and showing to the full the horrors of modern battle. These are the most appropriate and timely films that can be shown today.

The Last Volunteer

BIG POWERS BREAK.

A timely 5-reel war drama laid at the seat of the present Austrian-Servian war. Pathe made. A story of intense patriotism entwining relations of a crown prince and an innkeeper's daughter, with international affairs. War follows. In the grim and realistic battle scenes aeroplanes, artillery and every other modern engine of destruction is employed, and the resulting carnage faithfully pictured. A girl makes a heroic rescue midst splintering bullets. Good display in 1, 3, 6 and 24-sheet posters.

The Perils of Pauline

Pauline Puts Her Perils on the Screen and Takes Yours Out of the Box Office.

Pauline's the leading light of the movies. Her name means a crowd. She's written about, photographed, quoted and set to music. She's advertised in type, pictures, music and by word of mouth. She's the best known, best liked and best pulling character in film life—conservative statements, all of them. A "Pauline" run in your theater will look like a run on the bank, only it's a run on the receiving teller, for everything is coming in and nothing going out.

THERE'S NO LURE LIKE A PAULINE POSTER. SHE CORNERS ATTENDANCE.

War Is Hell

Aeroplanes Battle in the Clouds

A 4-part war picture in natural colors dealing mainly with modern aerial warfare. Exploits of great daring are featured — an aeroplane duel in the clouds, the destruction of giant war balloons, and the blowing up of an old mill, all woven into an absorbing story. 1, 3 and 6 sheet posters.

All Love Excelling

Sisters of Mercy Work Through Crimean War.

An American-made drama in 3 reels. A moving story of sacrifice which culminates in the Crimean War when France and England fought Russia. It features the humanitarian side of warfare and shows the work of the Sisters of Mercy in caring for the sick and wounded. 1, 3 and 6-sheet posters; 6-sheet scene of the Battle of Inkerman.

Forcing the Force

No Laugh Is Safe From This New Hartigan Comedy.

There's nothing forced about "Forcing the Force"—it's up in the Eclectic standard of humor. The only danger is to your patrons' vest buttons.

Cooling Ventilation Heating

TYPHOON MULTIBLADE BLOWER "Patented"
Made in sizes from 12 inches to 12 feet

"TYPHOON BLOW-IN SYSTEM" has revolutionized the ventilating problem. You get in front of a desk fan to keep cool, not in back. Apply this common sense and blow the air in.

Don't waste money experimenting with exhaust fans.

The TYPHOON MULTIBLADE BLOWER will force air right through ordinary exhaust fans. Reversed, the air can be exhausted as well.

Our Catalogue M. P. tells how to keep cool in summer and warm in winter.

TREASURE TROVE

By Loring M. Hewen

Bob and Frank decide to spend their vacation at the beach. They meet Col. Fairfield's two daughters. The Col. has too much regard for his daughters' future to think of letting either of them marry a man not able to properly support them. The boys, however, discover a paper among wreckage on the beach written in Spanish. It tells of a treasure and its location off shore. They are about to discover it when armed Cuban villains approach and threaten trouble. Then the Colonel appears and the villains flee. The boys are now rich and have won the Colonel's admiration.

Success in War and Moving Pictures

There is only one road to moving picture success—give the people what they want in a comfortable theater. You have the theater and the Eclectic Co. can give you just what the people want just when they want it. Just now the people want pictures of European War and we come to the front with the most complete and appropriate set of European War Feature Films obtainable.

The Last Volunteer

Five parts, American made—A patriotic drama of modern warfare on the land and above it, and laid at the seat of Today's War. Vividly realistic artillery engagements. Wonderful 1, 3, 6, 24 sheet posters.

Faithful Unto Death

Four parts—Europe's bitter rivals, France and Germany, in a struggle to the finish. Stirring battle scenes in Franco-Prussian War Story. 1, 3, 6, 24 sheet posters.

"War Is Hell"

Four parts in natural colors. Most marvelous exposition of the horrors of modern European warfare ever staged. Battles of aircraft and the last stand of a fallen aviator. 1, 3, 6 sheet posters.

Napoleon

Five parts—The only struggle recorded in history which is comparable with today's events. The world's greatest warrior at bay in the last great struggle for European supremacy. 1, 3, 6 sheet posters.

All Love Excelling

Three parts—A drama culminating in the Crimea when France and England fought Russia, in which a woman plays her part as a Sister of Mercy. 1, 3, 6 sheet posters.

McGraw In a Triple Play

Famous Baseball Manager Appears as Detective Swift in 3-Part Eclectic Attraction.

Manager J. J. McGraw of the New York Giants has added another achievement to his already long list. He successfully carried off the leading role in a great detective photoplay staged in all parts of the world. Mr. McGraw is a most modern detective—no overdone acting—no foolish disguises—just artistic realism in a setting of some of the world's most impressive scenery. This film is a double-header—Mr. McGraw, the story, and the setting all pull together to make your patrons want to see it.

By DAVID S. HULFISH

618 Pages, Including Index

Price $4.00

THIS BOOK is invaluable for reference and instruction to the thousands of workers in the motion picture field. Covers fully the three big branches of the motion picture business; the making of the pictures, the operation of all standard types of projecting machines, and the operation of the moving picture theater. The drawings, diagrams, and photographs used have been prepared especially for this work and their instructive value is as great as the text itself.

Uncle's Finish

An American Hartigan Comedy in one reel. Anybody with a funny bone will appreciate this diverting attraction.

Bungling Bunk's Bunco

A wild animal comedy in three parts. Bunks is braver in the parlor than he is in the jungle but in order to succeed in the former he has to show his prowess in the latter. In addition to adventures with lions, tigers, monkeys, leopards and elephants, he has to combat the advances of a native charmer. Bribes get him out of the harem and he escapes home with a captive lion, but the girl and her father follow, and let loose the lion in the midst of our hero's home-coming celebration. Pandemonium follows, and Bunk follows the lion when—well, that's all in the story. Your patrons will chuckle all the way home.

Whiffles' Double

and

Kashmir, British India

(in natural colors)

A split reel attraction, featuring a mirth-provoking comedy (Pathe made) in combination with scenic views in natural colors of the British Indian district of Kashmir.

The Woman Without a Heart

A 3-part tragedy. The story of a woman who really didn't have any heart. The place where her heart ought to be is filled only with an insatiable ambition for worldly gain, and her disregard for the feelings and interests of those who should be nearest and dearest to her is paid with its just reward. This is an exceptionally strong drama which shows impressively the hurt caused by selfishness and its ultimate penalty.

The Perils of Pauline

Pauline is a household word and stronger with the public every day. The hit of the season, and probably the hit of many seasons. Her popularity is ever on the rise. She is known, loved, talked about—she's a preferred investment and her returns are certain—they are big returns and they are growing bigger.

PAULINE TAKES THE CAKE AND THEN HANDS IT TO YOU

"THE BELOVED ADVENTURER"

BY EMMETT CAMPBELL HALL

Featuring ARTHUR JOHNSON and LOTTIE BRISCOE

A valuable addition to any library

A series of Fifteen Single Reel Dramatic Pictures, which might be run singly, as released or used in threes or fives as Special Features.

A Story of Extraordinary strength and interest with situations of the most intensely dramatic and thrilling nature, touching pathos and genuine humor.

Published in Book Form

Co-incident with the release of the films, there will be published, in book form, the complete story of the series. This idea is as novel as it will prove valuable to the exhibitor.

The book is in full cloth binding with fifteen full page half-tone illustrations and would ordinarily sell for $1.25. Desiring that it may share in the expense of promoting to the highest degree the success of the exhibitors showing this series, this book will be supplied at a special low price—a price absolutely unheard of in book-publishing. Write us for full details regarding price and helpful hints for distribution.

Exhibitors are urged to place orders for this book at the earliest possible moment, as the edition is limited.

A Special Invitation to Every Manufacturer, Sales Manager, Advertising Man, Trade Paper Editor and Publisher in the Country.

REGARDLESS of what your interest in trade journals may be, you are, in one way or another, a partner in the development of business building and business expansion through the medium of the Business Press. Any advance in trade journalism is of more than pocket-book interest to you. That your individual influence may be recorded—that you may add the light of your experience to that of the notable technical, class and trade journal editors and publishers in the country—you should cross three red-letter days on your desk pad and attend the

9th Annual Convention of The Federation of Trade Press Associations at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, September 24, 25, 26

Bring with you anything you have to offer in the way of suggestions bearing on editorial circulation, or advertising policies. Or, if you do nothing more, come and listen to those who are making the trade press movement so tremendous a factor in modern business efficiency. One new idea gleaned from this fraternity, banded together for your interests, will make your presence at this convention pay you dividends.

FACE VALUE

A Dramatic Adaptation of a Recent Magazine Story. By W. B. M. Ferguson. In Two Parts.

An absorbingly interesting drama which unfolds the various phases of its plot in a delightfully original manner. Attempting to impersonate Silas Wilding's nephew and so becomes heir to a fortune, Kelly marries a girl on "face value" and thereupon gets so deeply entangled in a plot that his fortune and happiness seem highly improbable. The story ends auspiciously.

To be released Friday, September 11th

THE FEDERATION OF TRADE PRESS ASSOCIATIONS

A Special Invitation to Every Manufacturer, Sales Manager, Advertising Man, Trade Paper Editor and Publisher in the Country.

REGARDLESS of what your interest in trade journals may be, you are, in one way or another, a partner in the development of business building and business expansion through the medium of the Business Press. Any advance in trade journalism is of more than pocket-book interest to you. That your individual influence may be recorded—that you may add the light of your experience to that of the notable technical, class and trade journal editors and publishers in the country—you should cross three red-letter days on your desk pad and attend the

Bring with you anything you have to offer in the way of suggestions bearing on editorial circulation, or advertising policies. Or, if you do nothing more, come and listen to those who are making the trade press movement so tremendous a factor in modern business efficiency. One new idea gleaned from this fraternity, banded together for your interests, will make your presence at this convention pay you dividends.

The Photo Play Productions Releasing Company has secured rights for the record breaking success

AFTER THE BALL

(IN SIX PARTS)

The picturization of Chas. K. Harris' world famous song.

Every Man, Woman and Child in America has been thrilled and moved to tears by the beautiful story contained in this masterpiece, and you will find that Every Exhibitor booking this film will make more money with it than with almost any other feature he has ever booked.

More Advertising has been done on AFTER THE BALL than Quo Vadis ever had, and you all know what a success that was.

During his travels while trying to forget his faithless sweetheart (EFFIE SHANNON), John Dale (HERBERT KELCEY) runs into the most breathless adventures during which is made the highest dive ever accomplished (136 feet into the swirling Harlem river from the High Bridge), breaking a world's record. ¶ A death defying leap from a racing motorcycle onto an express train travelling 60 miles an hour will make your patrons talk about this film forever. ¶ A jump from a train into a deep river while the train is crossing a bridge, a hand over hand escape on a clothesline four stories above the ground, and through, around and over it all the story of an undying love of a man for the woman he believed faithless will hold your patrons breathless with expectation and speechless with sympathy.

Book it today. Get your order in early.

The Littlest Rebel

Continues to pack motion picture theaters. This film dramatization of the famous play (William and Dustin Farnum's great success) is undoubtedly the biggest box office winner of the year. Very little open time left as those running it once are booking repeat dates. Have you booked it?

"NORTHERN LIGHTS"

FIVE PARTS

A Western Psychological Drama—unique and gripping.

The Critics say:

"A powerful story fittingly entitled to the descriptive term 'a psychological drama.' The scenes and settings suggest well the atmosphere of the story and the players are already known to the public for splendid work in other productions."—Motography.

"'Northern Lights' will have a wide appeal by reason of its double amusement value—on the dramatic side and on the spectacular side."—Moving Picture World.

"Several distinct threads of plot action are woven gradually together with considerable skill to form interesting dramatic material. The acting of 'Northern Lights' is without a hitch."—Morning Telegraph.

"CAPT. SWIFT"

FIVE PARTS

A Problem Drama—Startling and Entrancing

The Critics say:

"'Capt. Swift' is commended by virtue of its sterling worth, as a film of interest, of well handled situations, of capable direction, of good photography and of rich settings."—Motography.

"The photography is such as to cause exclamations of wonder. It might be described as plastic. There can be no doubt of the success of this feature. A review could not possibly do justice to it. To appreciate it, 'Capt. Swift' must be personally seen."—New York Review.

"'Capt. Swift' will immediately impress one as being photography of the better class. It is rapid in its dramatic action and the story reaches up to a tragic climax which ends the play in a manner quite different from the usual."—Billboard.

"Startling situations continuously develop. The picture has plenty of good, effective action. The story decidedly interests as it is."—Moving Picture World.

Two wonderful stories, marvelously depicted by all-star casts, artistic settings and perfect photography.

No matter how thrilling a story one may read, interest is not sustained if poor type, poor paper and poor press work make hard work for the eyes. It's the same with motion pictures. A clear picture is as necessary as a good scenario.

Because the basic product is right, the clearest pictures are on "Eastman" film. Look for the stencil mark in the margin.

By DAVID S. HULFISH

618 Pages, Including Index

Price $4.00

THIS BOOK is invaluable for reference and instruction to the thousands of workers in the motion picture field. Covers fully the three big branches of the motion picture business; the making of the pictures, the operation of all standard types of projecting machines, and the operation of the moving picture theater. The drawings, diagrams, and photographs used have been prepared especially for this work and their instructive value is as great as the text itself.

ALLIANCE PROGRAM

A combination of the World's Greatest Feature Photoplay Producers in a direct-to-exhibitor co-operative booking plan which insures to the better Theatres an absolutely dependable source from which to secure Big Features for 52 weeks in the year.

The exhibitor is the sole arbiter of the manufacturer's success, because his profit is derived solely from the popularity of the film. Each unit is independent of the other, obviating a forced program, and absolutely eliminating all element of chance in the quality of the releases.

Each manufacturer stands by himself, receiving a percentage of the bookings. The better picture he makes the more benefit he will derive. This is a tremendous incentive for rivalry in the race for quality.

The Alliance Films Corporation is not interested in the exchanges, nor the manufacturing companies. The manufacturing companies are not interested in the exchanges.

Every subject must be submitted to the exchanges before it is placed in the ALLIANCE PROGRAM, and an unbiased and uninfluenced committee judicially passes upon the drawing power of the film, the photography and acting.

The confidence of the manufacturer in his ability to produce the greatest films in the world, and his determination to do so, is apparent; otherwise these producers would not be willing to enter into such an arrangement. This statement is not made for mere publicity purposes, but is an actual, bona fide fact. There are many agreeable surprises in store for the exhibitor who will watch for ALLIANCE ANNOUNCEMENTS, but it must not be forgotten that every producer affiliated with the ALLIANCE FILMS CORPORATION must agree to the conditions hereinabove stated.

THE PATH FORBIDDEN

Dramatized from the book by John B. Hymer, in five parts. An intense human interest production, wonderfully acted, with

OCTAVIA HANDWORTH

The peerless star of the silent drama in the leading role, supported by Gordon De Maine, William A. William, John B. Hymer, and a large cast.

MARVELOUS SCENES

are presented, in exquisite photography, which will cause audiences to sit spell-bound in wonder and amazement. Through trick work and double exposure, Miss Handworth, playing the dual role of the twin sisters, is actually seen shaking hands with herself, and handing to, and taking from herself various articles, both figures being photographed close to the camera. This work has been pronounced by experts the most intricate ever attempted, and is the first time in the history of motion pictures that the feat has been accomplished.

No matter how thrilling

a story one may read, interest is not sustained if poor type, poor paper and poor press work make hard work for the eyes. It's the same with motion pictures. A clear picture is as necessary as a good scenario.

Because the basic product is right, the clearest pictures are on "Eastman" film. Look for the stencil mark in the margin.

The Warning

The Triumph of the Season Pronounced by Members of the Board of Censorship to be the Finest Film they had seen for Months.

A 3 reel American, Wharton-made drama. This is not an ordinary better-than-the-average play, but a veritable triumph in every respect. A wayward son, warned by his father, penetrates the future and glimpses what he might have been. The law is unable to deter the boy as he progresses from petty crimes to murder and the father finally takes the punishment into his own hands. Some of the most strikingly dramatic scenes ever screened. Featuring Creighton Hale and M. O. Penn. 1-3-6 sheet posters.

The Broken Promise

A 4-part drama—a story of love and revenge among the fisherfolk in a quaint old-fashioned village by the sea. Picturesque backgrounds, splendid acting, and action which carries a live interest through every scene. 1-3-6 sheet posters.

Miss Cinderella

A true fish story in one reel—American comedy made by the All Comedy Company — a merry tale of love and angling which proves that there are just as good fish in a mountain brook as there are on a hotel veranda. A film of solid enjoyment. 1 sheet posters.

The Perils of Pauline

Pauline has grown as necessary among the good things in motion pictures as sugar on the breakfast table. But a few months ago Pauline was a luxury to photoplay lovers, and now she's a necessity. A week without Pauline is a disappointment to the play-goer and a loss to the exhibitor.

THE FAVORITE PLAYERS PRODUCTION

"The Key to Yesterday"

WITH

as the Principal Actor, will absolutely be released in The Alliance Program, and will be shown in Hammerstein's beautiful Opera House, New York, beginning Oct. 12. This subject is dramatized from the book by Chas. Neville Buck. Supporting Mr. Blackwell are Miss Edna Mayo, J. Francis Dillon, John J. Sheehan, John Prescott, Gypsy Abbott, and one hundred others. In four parts.

"The Path Forbidden"

EXCELSIOR FEATURE FILM CO.

Released October 19

Five reels of thrills, sensations and surprises. An up-to-the-minute production, with a strong moral tone, picturized from John B. Hymer's book, with the popular star, in the leading role. Exquisite photography, marvelous trick work and effects, and a large, well-balanced cast, make this film an extraordinary feature.

"At the Old Cross Roads"

SELECT PHOTOPLAY PRODUCING CO.

Released October 26

From Arthur C. Aiston's play, which successfully toured the country for fourteen years, with

MISS ESTHA WILLIAMS

The star of the original production, in the leading role. Many big scenes are shown, including the burning of the bridge, the uprising of the blacks and the ensuing battle, the sensational court room scene, etc., etc.

"McVeagh of the South Seas"

PROGRESSIVE MOTION PICTURE CO.

Released November 2

A true story of the south seas, from the book by H. D. Carey. In five reels by the Progressive Motion Picture Co. Featuring Harry Cary.

The Midnight Ride of Paul Revere

Retold after the famous poem by Henry W. Longfellow

Of all the characters of our Revolutionary period, none is more endeared to young and old than that of Paul Revere, whose exploit has been immortalized by Longfellow so effectively that the lines of the poem and the incidents portrayed are graven more deeply, perhaps, upon the average American mind than any other character or exploit of our American history.

The action throughout this film is finely sustained and many of the scenes, including Revere's house, that of Hancock, the wall at Lexington, where the first shots were fired, were all taken on the exact historical spots where the original action took place.

This is a film that will stir the hearts and minds of young and old and should be met with a tremendous welcome throughout the entire country.

Supremacy on the Land is the cry of one faction while another claims the mastery of the sea. Each nation has one or two main points of strength. The same is true of motion pictures.

The Pathe' Daily News

however, is supreme on either land or sea or in the air. It is strong at all points—wherever there is something going on that is of interest to the world, there you will find a Pathe camera man. That is why each individual in your audience will find something of special interest to him—all the action of all the world that can and should be seen, plainly seen in picture language. Make your screen a news sheet while news continues to be the center of public interest.

The Pathe' Daily News (Issued Semi-Weekly) is now to be obtained through the Eclectic Feature Film Exchanges.

THE MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY

Story by Harold MacGrath Scenario by Lloyd Lonergan

Episode No. 18 of The Million Dollar Mystery has just been released. It contains new thrills—new action—and is keenly interesting. It puts another wedge in the tremendous popularity of this picture. All 18 episodes are now available for bookings.

$10,000.00 will be paid for the best 100-word solution of the mystery. 300 leading newspapers are now running this story. Exhibitors may arrange bookings by applying at once to

The Thanhouser Three-a-Week

Tuesday, October 20th. "Old Jackson's Girl."

This is a two-reel Western drama that throbs with emotion—excitement. It depicts an episode from the life of Jim Jackson—a suspected horse thief—whose daughter is in love with a young ranchman. The thrills which are exhibited before the young couple is finally united, make this an exceptionally interesting photoplay. Note this excellent cast: Dave Thompson, Mayre Hall, Morris Foster, Justus D. Barnes, Clare Kroell, E. Sherwood and Jack Sullivan.

Sunday, October 25th. "Mr. Cinderella."

A beautiful playlet based on the fairy tale idea. How little Jimmie—the poor, pitied boy—is given an opportunity by his fairy godfather to visit the county fair and meet the Queen of the Popcorn Trust and enjoy himself immensely, is an interesting film story. The cast includes Nolan Gane, Fan Bourke, E. Turner, J. Myers, Dave Thompson and Mildred Hellar.

Don't Be Alarmed About Carbons

¶ Unscrupulous speculators are still shouting "Carbon Famine" and trying to scare exhibitors into paying as high as fifteen dollars per hundred for 5/8x12 carbons—an increase of over four hundred per cent.

¶ We have endeavored to protect you against this extortion by offering to divide our limited stock at the old prices among those shows which were in danger of closing, but our announcement probably did not reach every one.

¶ We are beginning to get returns from our increased equipment, and by the time this goes to press we will be in a position to take care of all exhibitors who are short on carbons, if they do not come at us too strong.

¶ We have made no advance in price, but we reserve the right to cut any order to five hundred or less in case our stock does not warrant filling larger orders.

General Manager Lewis J. Selznick Concludes an Alliance Between the Liebler Company and the World Film Corporation

The World Film Corporation has effected another pace making combination and has started work at its Fort Lee studios on the following successful plays that it has secured from the internationally famous firm of theatrical producers.

The LIEBLER COMPANY written by that most resourceful American dramatist

PAUL ARMSTRONG

ALIAS JIMMY VALENTINE which has been one of the biggest dramatic triumphs of the decade and which has been enjoyed in every English speaking land.

THE RENEGADE the powerful play of contemporary life.

THE DEEP PURPLE the searching exploration of the doings of the underworld by a master playmaker.

In addition to starting work on these plays, preparations are under way to present in photoplay form the greatest spectacle ever shown on the American stage, Pierre Loti's Chinese romance, which was presented by the Liebler Company at the Century Theatre at a cost of $200,000.00 with Viola Allen starring in the title role.

A Daughter of Heaven

These features are to be released soon by the World Film Corporation. It behooves everyone interested in showing the best features obtainable, to communicate with their nearest exchange of the

FRANK L. DYER (Former President, General Film Company)
J. PARKER READ, Jr. (Producer of the Photoplays, "The Garden of Allah" and "Victory")
J. SEARLE DAWLEY (The man who made the Famous Players famous) Director General

Have joined forces in organizing the Dyreda Art Film Corporation

The culminating step in their making that work possible has come in their securing the

WORLD FILM CORPORATION

to become their exclusive distributors, because the World Film Corporation is the only high grade feature film distributors who can properly market the Dyreda's artistic product. The first feature to be released is

Laura Sawyer in "One of Millions"

The most impressive, touching, indictment of the evils of war ever conceived. Produced by the poet of the screen, J. SEARLE DAWLEY, who made "The Charge of the Light Brigade," and countless other sensations.

Release Date, November 16

The Next Dyreda Release will be Laura Sawyer and Robert Broderick in
"In the Name of the Prince of Peace." Release date on this feature is to be announced later.

The TAINT

An American drama in 4 parts. The story of a woman's winning fight against overwhelming odds. From start to finish this film is a succession of unusual gripping situations which lead to a splendid climax. In making his escape on a locomotive the villain is plunged over an embankment and meets his death. An exceptional cast does full justice to these intensely dramatic scenes. Ruby Hoffman, Edward Jose and Creighton Hale are featured. 1-3-6 sheet posters.

MOTHER'S DARLING LITTLE BOY

1-reel comedy by the All Comedy Films, Inc. A boy at home is one thing, but outside he's quite another. Mothers have a chance to see both sides in this true-to-life boy story. Solid fun. 1-3-6 sheet posters.

IN A DIFFICULT POSITION and WHIFFLES' NIGHTMARE

A double-header comedy. A split reel with fun on both sides. Breezy enough to cool your theatre and buoyant enough to carry a whole performance. It shouldn't be missed. 1-sheet posters.

THE PERFECT "36"

Introduced by the inimitable Montague Glass

A 4-reel comedy. A story that will rock you in the seat from laughing. From Salesgirl to the main prop of the business our Perfect "36" smiles her way in a film that abounds with absurdly funny situations. It could all happen and everybody that sees it wishes it would. 1-3-6 sheet posters.

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

Of course there are longer films than Pauline, but there have never been more genuine thrills and breath catching situations crowded into two reels than you will find in each release of the Perils. Each episode goes the last one better, but you can't afford to miss any of them. Pauline sets the pace for box office receipts.

SPECIAL UNIVERSAL FEATURES

"THE MASTER KEY"

Not the CHEAPEST Serial

But the GREATEST!

"THE MASTER KEY" is the most massive, the MOST EXPENSIVE serial ever made. Naturally, it isn't the cheapest. You will have to pay extra money for it, but you won't mind because (a) we didn't mind paying tremendous extra amounts on the production cost of every reel and (b) that extra expenditure has resulted in a picture that will get you EXTRA PROFITS. And you don't mind paying for extra profits! So cheerfully pay whatever figure your exchange man must ask because of "MASTER KEY'S" immense production cost, and be thankful that it's not the cheapest serial BUT THE GREATEST!

ROB'T LEONARD

Greatest, because John Fleming Wilson (its author) turned in a story that he frankly thought we couldn't produce as a film. Mr. Wilson honestly didn't think that we would undertake to put "THE MASTER KEY'S" feats, thrills and realism into an actual motion picture, where all those elements would have to be "acted out"—genuinely portrayed, thrill for thrill, stunt for stunt! When we did undertake to find the directors and actors who could do such a play, ARTHUR WILSON WAS THE MOST SURPRISED MAN IN THE WORLD. And when with the "first print" of Reel One, we proved to him that we had visualized his thrill-masterpiece, Mr. Wilson was so fascinated that we had to run that reel for him again and again!

ELLA HALL

The wonderful acting of Robert Leonard and Ella Hall completely captivated Author Wilson. He said that he found in them the exact types of hero and heroine he tried to describe in "THE MASTER KEY." He said that we had reproduced his entire weird theme WITH MORE REALISM THAN HIS WRITTEN STORY DID. Since there is a difference between writing of a thing AND PRODUCING IT IN ACTUAL MOTION PICTURES you will appreciate with Mr. Wilson, Universal's feat! "THE MASTER KEY" appears in fifteen weekly numbers. The leading newspaper of America prints the story. "THE MASTER KEY" starts week of November 16. See the nearest Universal exchange TO-DAY.

A Question of Identity

A Dramatic Adaptation of "The Window that Monsieur Forgot".
By Charles Imlay Taylor.

Here is a film of thrilling dramatic interest. Twin brothers so much resemble each other that in the culmination of the criminal career of one, the question of identity was exceedingly difficult to decide. One had murdered the Chevalier but had escaped immediate arrest. The other brother was charged with the crime. Which was which? The final scene in the Police Court where sentence was about to be passed upon the innocent brother is halted by the arrival of the dead brother's body, for he had resisted arrest after being hunted down by witnesses to the affair. A thrilling film throughout. The air of reality will cause this film to be widely commented upon.

In Two parts, 2,000 feet—To be released Friday Nov. 13th.

BRUSH
Electric Lighting Sets

4-5 K. W. Brush Electric Lighting Sets
Suitable for Gas, Gasoline, or Kerosene

Mr. Moving Picture Man:—

Are you one of thousands who are held up by the Electric Lighting Companies charging you highway robbery prices for bum electric juice?

If you are, it's time to join the Brush Electric Lighting Set Club.

Or if you are a travelling showman and are carting around several tons of antique Engine and Electric apparatus for making Electric Current you need our catalogue right now.

Brush Lighting Sets are made in sizes from 2 to 10 k.w. Our catalogue has more useful information about small electric lighting plants than any other ever printed. It's yours for the asking, whether you buy or not.

Gentlemen:—

In reference to the Motiograph machine, I bought two of these machines in 1911 and 1912, and both of them are in perfect running order at the present day, and each doing work seven nights per week. During their life, neither machine has stopped for one single night.

I consider the Motiograph excels all other machines for projection, steadiness and costs less. No wonder you say "cut down your repair bills and get a Motiograph."

Have had experience with several other machines, and I would have none other than a Motiograph.

Yours sincerely,

What Could She Do?

A Drama. By Gertrude Lyon.

Sylvia Fairfax, a young graduate, upon the death of her father is brought face to face with the hitherto unthought of problem of earning a livelihood. Brought up in affluence she is bewildered by the sudden change of circumstances. She answers an advertisement for a governess and secures such a position in a well to do family only to discover soon, that she is utterly unable to control the children of the family. She is discharged and seeks the city, bag in hand. Her varied experiences in the ordinary boarding house, then in a Department Store lead to a thrilling climax in the Police Inspector's office. She is at last acquitted of theft and engaged as a detective on the Police force. Her first case—one of kidnapping—proves what she could do, for she outwits the kidnappers and wins back the stolen child. A thrilling reel.

In three parts, 3,000 feet—To be released Friday, November 20th

"THE FIRST TO STANDARDIZE PHOTOPLAYS"

Essanay

MR. G. M. ANDERSON

Known all around the world as the originator of "BRONCHO BILLY" is presented in

"THE TELL-TALE HAND"

The latest and greatest western drama, written by Frank Blighton, Author of "What Happened to Mary?" and "Who Will Marry Mary?"

This drama is filled with human interest. It touches the tenderest emotions of the heart and stirs the soul. It is replete with dramatic incidents, gun play, a posse hunt, a murder trial, a hand-to-hand fight on racing steeds. It is the third of Essanay's complete prize mystery plays produced in conjunction with The Ladies' World. The complete story appears in the December number of the magazine, with the exception of one paragraph. Big prizes are offered by the magazine for the best written lost paragraph. It can be found only in the Essanay film. 5,000,000 readers will look for it to solve the mystery.

Released November 19 through the feature department of The General Film Company

Released Monday, November 30

"A Maid of War"

(With Sweedie)

This time Sweedie gets into an awful mix-up over the war but explains herself out of it.

Released Tuesday, December 1

"The Buffer"

A child buries the hatchet in a war between a capitalist and a district attorney.

Released Wednesday, December 2

The Fable of "The Club Girls and the Four Times Veteran"

By GEORGE ADE

In which the widow upsets all the old maids' theories about husbands.

Released Thursday, December 3

"Sophie's Fatal Wedding"

That famous trio of funsters—Sophie, Slim and Mustang—who put Snakeville on the photoplay map, in a screaming farce comedy.

Released Friday, December 4

"The Place, the Time and the Man"

(Two Acts)

A thrilling drama of a battle with the "Wolves of Wall Street." Adapted from The Munsey Magazines. With Richard C. Travers and Gerda Holmes.

Released Saturday, December 5

"Broncho Billy's Judgment"

Broncho quits the office of sheriff rather than arrest a man for killing a wife beater.

MR. FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN

Who was voted the world's most popular photoplayer, is presented in

"In the Glare of the Lights"

AND

"The Plum Tree"

Millions are being thrilled by these plays. They are the first two of Essanay's complete prize mystery dramas, produced in conjunction with The Ladies' World, and are filling theatres everywhere.

"ONE WONDERFUL NIGHT"

(In 4 acts)

MR. FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN is presented in this drama of love and intrigue, which is filling theatres all over the country.

That Balboa Series of Twelve Heart-Gripping Dramas

Propounding 12 Vital Questions of Life,
Commands World-Wide Attention

IN the entire realm of picturedom there has never been anything more praiseworthy—never anything more meritorious—never anything that will so unerringly draw the crowds. Regardless of any other inducements that may be offered, the Balboa Amusement Producing Co. will give—

$1,000 IN GOLD

FOR the most satisfactory answers to these 12 Vital Questions of Life. One will be asked in each feature. The series will run the entire gamut of human emotions—love, pity, pathos, sympathy, joy, pleasure, passion, envy, anger, hate, jealousy, rage, malice, grief, fear and revenge. Each feature will embody a separate and distinct theme. Each will stand by itself. No attempt will be made to use the same cast throughout. No effort will be made to link together a conglomeration of incidents in a hodge-podge plot. But each will be so impelling that the public will yell for the entire twelve after the first has been seen. Men and women will struggle with the problem, "Who Pays?" which will trail each production.

One reel comedies are in high popular favor and the demand is growing greater every day.

Yet of all forms of photoplay the short comedy is the most difficult to produce.

MinA Films are the result of careful study and long preparation for this especial work, backed up by years of successful experience in the production of every style of picture.

Not a word was said about the time and money and effort being spent in the perfecting of MinA Films until they had reached the heartbreaking standard set by their producer.

Early in September that high mark had been surpassed and as proof of their extraordinary merit, MinA Films were added to the regular licensed program and, commencing on Thursday, December 17th, the first weekly release will be made through the

or other Licensed Exchanges. Place your orders now with the branch office nearest you, or ask for particulars through Melies Mfg. Co., 204 E. 38th St., N. Y.

Pictures of the Players are not only ornamental necessities for your theatre, but serve to keep up your patron's interest in the plays you are running.

Pathé

has introduced an innovation in player pictures.

Here are four superb oil portraits of the popular Pathe players Pearl White, Eleanor Woodruff, Crane Wilbur, and Paul Panzer. They are reproduced by a wonderful new process that retains the full color richness, technique and finish of the originals—in fact, they cannot be distinguished from the originals. Yet they are sold at a price within the reach of everybody.

Paul Panzer

Eleanor Woodruff

You must see these pictures to appreciate their amazing beauty. When framed they are unsurpassed for the lobby of a theatre or for the home.

Painted for us by the famous artists Goldbeck, Crisp, and Nikolaki, each picture is signed both by the artist and by the player portrayed. Each is a masterpiece. Each was especially selected and approved by the individual players.

Your patrons will want these pictures as soon as they see them and learn the inconceivably low price. This opens up a new source of profit to you. Advertising matter will be furnished.

Size of pictures—13x17 inches, mounted ready for framing. Price—$2.50 each, f. o. b. Exchange where purchased.

These splendid reproductions may be obtained through any of Eclectic Feature Film Exchanges, at the home office, or through an exhibitor showing the "Perils of Pauline."

The Stolen Birthright

3-part drama made by the Wharton's. The touching story of twin sisters who never knew each other because of a baby that died when they were born. A pulsing human story that shows Thurlow Bergen and Elsie Esmond at their best. 1-3-6 sheet posters.

30 Years of a Gambler's Life

3 reel powerful drama made by Pathe. Shows how gambling greases the decline in the pathway of life, and how the nearness of an unspeakable calamity may straighten a man out. A drama of human strength and weakness. 1-3-6 sheet posters.

Jolts of Jealousy

1 reel American Pathe comedy. A Swedish maid, a Swedish farmer, his advertisement for a wife, the maids mistress and her husband—jolts of jealousy and a laugh with every jolt.

Florence La Badie—the world's most famous motion picture player—A Thanhouser Star

THE popularity of Thanhouser productions is due to the remarkable strength of the Thanhouser organization. In regular Thanhouser releases you will find such stars as Florence La Badie and Sidney Bracy who made famous The Million Dollar Mystery.

The overwhelming success of The Million Dollar Mystery demonstrates the ability of the Thanhouser Film Corporation as a producer of high quality photoplays.

The Thanhouser Film Corporation releases three productions every week through the Mutual Film Corporation in the United States and Canada. Exhibitors can arrange bookings in America through the nearest Mutual Exchange.

For the current week we announce these three releases:

Tues., Dec. 1st. "The Center of the Web." A two-reel drama including Claire Kroell and Frank Wood. Fri., Dec. 4th. "Naidra, the Dream Woman." A drama cleverly enacted by Riley Chamberlain, Mignon Anderson, Morris Foster and Carey L. Hasting. Sun., Dec. 6th. "The Amateur Detective." A drama with Carey L. REMEMBER DECEMBER 17TH

MinA Films are being exploited by the most gigantic publicity campaign ever conducted for a single brand of pictures

Never in the whole history of the industry has publicity been attempted on such a grand scale except by three of the large distributing organizations, and they confused the public by trying to popularize several brands at once. MinA publicity is concentrated on MinA Films alone.

MADE IN AMERICA

For six months the people in every city in America—THE PEOPLE OF YOUR TOWN—have been reading in the newspapers and magazines of the actors, directors and peculiarities of manufacture which go to make MinA Films different and better than any one reel comedies they have ever known.

This remarkable advertising to the public and to the trade has been done for you. It means ready made audiences, and a continued ever growing demand because honest quality of product stands squarely back of the advertising. Book MinA Films through all licensed exchanges, commencing December 17th and continuing every week thereafter on the

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

Frank Farrington —the Thanhouser star who was made famous in the character of Braine in The Million Dollar Mystery—now appears in regular releases of

Thanhouser Photoplays

This is simply another indication of the strength of the Thanhouser organization—a group of the most noted film stars known. Three Thanhouser productions are released each week through the Mutual Film Corporation in the United States and Canada. Book Thanhouser productions and draw packed houses.

For the current week we announce:

Sunday, Dec. 20th. "Sid Nee's Finish." A play depicting the life of the Chinese laundryman, Sid Nee. Enacted by a star cast including Sydney Bracy, Fan Burke, Joe Phillips.

Tuesday, December 22nd. "Under False Colors." This drama is the first Thanhouser release featuring Florence La Badie since The Million Dollar Mystery appeared. It is an exceptional two-reel play with Florence La Badie in the title role, assisted by Miss Forbes, Virginia Waite, Mrs. Farrington and Frank Wood.

FANTASMA Hanlon Brothers' Famous Feature Spectacle

The World's Most Famous Fantasy

Gorgeous Spectacles in Fairyland with George Hanlon, Jr., as the Clown

Released January 19th through the General Film Co.

George Hanlon, Jr., appears as Pico, the most famous clown ever created. W. T. Carleton, the noted Mephisto, as the Prince of Darkness. The greatest money-making spectacle the stage has ever seen—ten million dollars gross—during thirty years of popularity. More beautiful, weird and wonderful than the great stage illusionists, Hanlon Brothers, ever could make it. A gorgeous panorama in fairyland, illumined with brilliant photography and exquisite color effects. Prince and Princess, betrothed, are torn asunder by Mephisto Zamaliel carrying her off to the lower regions and beneath the sea. The Prince, with ever faithful and funny Pico, follow her tortuous trials, aided by the all powerful Queen Fantasma, till the lovers, united, sail away on the sea of happiness—an exquisite effect. Indescribably beautiful.

The Motiograph for Satisfaction

STOP—think of the many thousand 1910, 1911 and 1912 MOTIOGRAPHS in use today, whose owners claim no up-keep and pictures as good as new machines will project.

What does this mean? It means that when you buy a MOTIOGRAPH you buy satisfaction for days and many years to come. Invest in a MOTIOGRAPH today or write for Motiograph literature.

Every leading paper in the United States and Canada will carry the story of Runaway June.

George Randolph Chester and Lillian Chester are the authors of Runaway June. It is their best work.

The most wonderful cast ever seen in pictures will appear in Runaway June. Over sixty members are in the Stock Company.

The action in Runaway June is unique in many ways. The picture and series do not depend on one star but the whole company act big live heart interest parts.

Runaway June has the most daring and original plot ever seen on the screen. It thrills from title to tale-piece.

Runaway June is not a serial but a serial series. Each installment is a complete story dealing with the most vital problem of life.

Money—the great God gold is the fundamental plot on which the action of Runaway June depends—it is responsible for all the situations in the story.

This great serial series will be released in January —if you are a live exhibitor, no matter what program you are using, you will

NOTICE

Commencing on December 17th and continuing every Thursday thereafter, the regular licensed program will include a new one reel comedy of unusual merit.

Public demand for "funny pictures" is so overwhelming that one reel comedies have become a vital requisite to every daily program.

Exhibitors find it difficult—in many cases impossible—to secure consistently good comedies, and it is to meet precisely this condition that MinA Films have been devised.

They are the result of long, special study and practical test by one of the oldest and most successful manufacturers in the industry. MinA Films are recommended for your immediate consideration. Through all licensed exchanges and branches of the chock full of that happy Yule Tide spirit that will send gobs of pure joy through any audience. Three human narratives, as Christmas-y as anything ever projected on the screen. Told in pictures in a beautiful way—by the cleverest of Universal Movie stars. Bristling Xmas atmosphere. Rich Xmas settings. Clever Xmas action. Young and old alike will applaud them. Talk about them. They will pack your house. They will insure your portion of the Xmas coin to be spent this season. Book these subjects immediately. Write or wire your exchange.

MOVING UNIVERSAL PICTURES

Monday, December 17th (Imp),—Within the Gates of Paradise—A one-reel subject, portraying a pathetic story of the suffering and want of a poor family—father, mother and two children. Husband out of work. Can't buy Xmas things for kiddies. Is interrupted—caught in the act—yet everything ends happy. Very dramatic. A real Xmas story beautifully told.

Wednesday, December 19th (Bison), 2 reels—The Christmas Spirit—featuring Murdock MacQuarrie in a story of a wrecked human life brought back to home and family through a strange accidental meeting. A story of wandering, suffering and strange experiences of an aged man, with a most unexpected ending, which brings joy to all.

December 24th (Rex), 2 reels—The Big Sister's Christmas—an amusing yet pathetic story of a mixed up love affair of four young folks, showing the big heartedness and the sacrifice the big sister was willing to make to bring joy to her younger sister. There's a fire, a rescue, plenty of dandy love scenes, and as usual everything ends up with that Universal punch that sends everybody away happy.

Timely Words

The announcement of the Alliance Program was somewhat of a surprise to the trade in general.

Not so, however, to those who knew the many months of patient labor spent in crystallizing the scheme and in building the machinery of the gigantic organization.

The wheels have been turning since the 12th day of October, increasing in velocity and speed, until today the Alliance stands forth a tower of strength, and growing stronger every day.

The advertising of the Alliance has been honest. No false promises have been made. No wild statements of financial backing have been disseminated. The exhibitor's only interest is the picture on the screen, and the sole aim of the Alliance Films Corporation is to place on its program the best feature films that can be had, and it has done so.

The Alliance Films Corporation is not hampered or controlled by any manufacturing company. It reserves the right to buy film on the screen, and it sets the standard for its film productions.

This plan has the complete approval of such manufacturers as are sincere in their determination to produce good film and really put the money into them.

The quality of the productions will increase steadily. It must not be forgotten that the Alliance Program was launched in the midst of certain conditions existing in the trade, and that it has steadily pulled away from these conditions. It has accomplished wonders in a very short time, and in the near future will stand apart and alone, — and unquestionably the best program in the world.

Future announcements will show that the biggest and best things in filmdom are being done in the Alliance ranks, and that the exhibitor handling the Alliance Program will have reason to congratulate himself.

Wadsworth and Housman in a New Kind of Edison Comedy

Real "Komic-All" Comedies

First of all, let us confess that we realize that our comedies in the past have not had the sparkling speed of our more serious releases. But now—and henceforth—it will be different. We thought the public was ready for comedy replete with real humor—that they had outgrown their old love for the slapstick of circus days. But we found they still want the slapstick—and with an ear to the ground and eye to what the public demands—we are quick to turn about and turn out, from now on, some of the most rollicking and side-splitting screams that ever tickled an audience—whirlwinds—gales of laughter that rip off the funniest, oddest and quaintest of comedy at spanking speed. Wait till you see "The Courtship of the Cooks" (to be released Dec. 30), or "The Champion Process Server" (to be released Jan. 4), if you want to see laughs ripped off every second. William Wadsworth and Arthur Housman—a comedy team not to be equalled on the screen, or stage—are featured in this new great string of comedies that prove these irresistible laugh-makers are past masters of the art of fun-making.

Other Forthcoming Edison Films:

WILLIAM WADSWORTH makes an excellent "Flirt" in a comedy by the same name by Gilbert White, and creates some side-splitting situations as he turns from girl to girl till at last he is pursued by all his rejected ones. Released Dec. 14th.

BARRY O'MOORE as "Octavius" takes the part of Santa Claus and gets mixed up with a burglar, who plays Santa Claus, too, in the same home. "The Adventure of the Wrong Santa Claus" is the title of the reel. Released Dec. 21st.

GERTRUDE McCOY plays the part of "The Stenographer" and brings into strong relief the economic necessities and pitfalls that beset the girl who earns her living. Released Dec. 12th. Gertrude McCoy also takes the part of "Mary" in "The Birth of our Saviour."

MARC MacDERMOTT plays a double role in "The Best Man"—as the jilted bridegroom and the real benedict. Much merriment is created by the many embarrassing situations. Released Dec. 11th. Marc MacDermott also figures in "A Premature Compromise" as "Lord Stranleigh," a dramatic representation of the famous Lord Stranleigh Series by Robert Barr. Released Dec. 25th.

BIGELOW COOPER maks a fine smuggler and counterfeiter in "Mr. Daly's Wedding Day," bribing both cop and cabby. Released Dec. 28th.

MABEL TRUNNELLE is certainly doing most excellent work in the series, "Olive's Opportunities," in which she figures as "Olive," the gypsy girl. One of this series is released every Tuesday. Dec. 1st, 8th, 15th, 22nd, 29th.

George Hanlon, Jr., appears as Pico, the most famous clown ever created. W. T. Carleton, the noted Mephisto, as the Prince of Darkness. The greatest money-making spectacle the stage has ever seen—ten million dollars gross—during thirty years of popularity. More beautiful, weird and wonderful than the great stage illusionists, Hanlon Brothers, ever could make it. A gorgeous panorama in fairyland, illumined with brilliant photography and exquisite color effects. Prince and Princess, betrothed, are torn asunder by Mephisto Zamaliel carrying her off to the lower regions and beneath the sea. The Prince, with ever faithful and funny Pico, follow her tortuous trials, aided by the all powerful Queen Fantasma, till the lovers, united, sail away on the sea of happiness—an exquisite effect. Indescribably beautiful.

Recipe for "Program" Making

The "standard" form of procedure which seems to be very fashionable at the present time is about as follows:

Take 24 hours of preparation; add press notices ad lib; mix in a few dollars worth of advertising; let the concoction simmer for a week or two; then sit back and note the wonderfully sudden evaporation of the whole business.

In the successful launching of the stupendous nation-wide enterprise now universally known as the

we adopted a new standard and proceeded along entirely new lines. These involved:

1. A year of preparation.
2. The opening of 43 exchanges.
3. The expenditure of $2,500,000.
4. The organization of the United Motion Picture Producers, Inc.

RESULT—The establishment of the United Film Service on a sound, permanent basis.

The United offers to the exhibitor a complete and diversified service of single and multiple reels which will fit his every requirement.

Power's Cameragraph

No. 6 A

Has maintained its supremacy since the inception of the motion picture business, through sheer force of merit. In it are to be found more points than can be discovered elsewhere, and it approaches closer to absolute perfect projection than any other machine.

Projection

Power's has developed this to the highest point of efficiency—pictures without flicker, clear and steady.

Operation

So delicately adjusted that a child may run it, though it always does a man's work and without noise.

Parts

Interchangeable, easy of access and constructed of the best material that money can buy and all made by us, bearing our name and guarantee.

No More Dark Screens

Power's 6 A is equipped with our patented loop setter device which will reset the lower loop automatically without stopping the machine.

THESE ARE BUT A FEW POINTS WHICH MAKE FOR

Power's Supremacy
